

Human Rights Watch

Torture, Former Combatants, Political Prisoners, Terror Suspects, & Terrorists

<https://www.hrw.org/news/2016/08/30/thailand-break-silence-day-disappeared>

Campaign and Advocacy

Help us continue to fight human rights abuses. Please give now to support our work

Fulfill Pledge to Criminalize Enforced Disappearance

Share this via Facebook

Share this via Twitter

Share this via WhatsApp

Share this via Email

Other ways to share Share this via LinkedIn

Share this via Reddit  Share this via Telegram  Share this via Printer

(New York) Thailand's government has failed to abide by its pledge to make enforced disappearance a crime under Thai laws, Human Rights Watch said today. August 30 is the United Nations International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances.

Prime Minister Prayut Chan-ocha speaks during a news conference in Bangkok, Thailand on August 15, 2016.

Click to expand Image

Prime Minister Prayut Chan-ocha speaks during a news conference in Bangkok, Thailand on August 15, 2016. 2016 Reuters

After years of advocacy by human rights groups, the Thai government on May 24, 2016, announced it would submit a bill to the national assembly that would criminalize torture and enforced disappearances. The government also said it would ratify the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance. However, the government provided no timeframe for implementing these pledges.

Another year has passed with the Thai government failing to address the grave problem of enforced disappearances in the country, said Brad Adams, Asia director. As a result abusive officials continue to evade the punishment they deserve because Thai laws still don't criminalize these cruel practices.

Since 1980, the UN Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances has recorded 82 cases of enforced disappearance in Thailand. Many of these cases implicated Thai officials including the disappearances of prominent Muslim lawyer Somchai Neelapaijit in March 2004, and ethnic Karen activist Por Cha Lee Billy Rakchongcharoen in April 2014 but none have been successfully resolved. Human Rights Watch and other human rights groups working in Thailand believe that the actual number of such cases in Thailand is higher due to some families of victims and witnesses remaining silent for fear of reprisal, and because the government lacks an effective witness protection system.

During the 25th Session of the Human Rights Councils Universal Periodic Review (UPR) Working Group in May 2016, the Thai government pledged to take steps to ratify the convention against enforced disappearance and align domestic legislation with Thailand's international obligations and recommendations by UN treaty bodies.

Abusive officials continue to evade the punishment they deserve because Thai laws still don't criminalize these cruel practices.

Brad Adams

Asia Director

As drafted, the yet to be introduced bill would be the first Thai law to recognize and criminalize torture and enforced disappearance including for crimes committed outside Thailand with no exemptions for political or security reasons. The draft law provides that government officials who commit enforced disappearance or torture could face up to 20 years in prison; up to 30 years if the enforced disappearance or torture leads to serious injury; and life imprisonment if death results. Any commanders or supervisors could face half of the penalty if they intentionally ignore the knowledge of enforced disappearance or torture committed by their subordinates.

Enforced disappearance is defined under international law as the arrest or detention of a person by state officials or their agents followed by a refusal to acknowledge the deprivation of liberty, or to reveal the person's fate or whereabouts. Enforced disappearances violate a range of fundamental human rights protected under international law, including prohibitions against arbitrary arrest and detention; torture and other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment; and extrajudicial execution. The UN General Assembly has repeatedly described enforced disappearance as an offense to human dignity and a grave and flagrant violation of international human rights law.

Human Rights Watch has repeatedly urged Thai authorities including in a January 14, 2016 letter to Prime Minister Gen. Prayut Chan-ocha to take all necessary steps to end the practice of enforced disappearance. Of particular concern is the military's ongoing use of secret detention facilities for dissenters and suspects in national security cases under section 44 of the 2014 interim constitution and the Martial Law Act of 1914.

Thai authorities need to follow through on their pledges to end enforced disappearances, which devastates families as well as victims, Adams said. The families of Thailand's disappeared need to know that their government is doing all it can to bring to justice those responsible for this abhorrent practice.

A Decade of Enforced Disappearances in Bangladesh

Abuses under Sri Lanka's Prevention of Terrorism Act

Share this via Facebook

Share this via Twitter

Share this via WhatsApp

Share this via Email

Other ways to share Share this via LinkedIn

Share this via Reddit  Share this via Telegram  Share this via Printer

Human Rights Watch defends the rights of people in 90 countries worldwide, spotlighting abuses and bringing perpetrators to justice

Get updates on human rights issues from around the globe. Join our movement today.

Human Rights Watch is a 501(C)(3) nonprofit registered in the US under EIN: 13-2875808