

Human Rights Watch

Torture, Former Combatants, Political Prisoners, Terror Suspects, & Terrorists

<https://www.hrw.org/report/2021/09/07/security-forces-dealt-them/suspicious-killings-and-extrajudicial-executions>

Policy Issue Resources

Help us continue to fight human rights abuses. Please give now to support our work

Share this via Facebook

Share this via Twitter

Share this via WhatsApp

Share this via Email

Other ways to share

Share this via LinkedIn

Share this via Reddit

Share this via Telegram

Share this via Printer

Download the full report in English

Annex I: Human Rights Watch Letter Sent to Minister of Interior Mahmoud Tawfiq on April 27 and May 11, 2021

Annex II: Human Rights Watch Letter Sent to Prosecutor General Hamada al-Sawy on April 27 and May 11, 2021

Download the Summary & Recommendations in French

Video

Download the full report in English

Annex I: Human Rights Watch Letter Sent to Minister of Interior Mahmoud Tawfiq on April 27 and May 11, 2021

Annex II: Human Rights Watch Letter Sent to Prosecutor General Hamada al-Sawy on April 27 and May 11, 2021

Download the Summary & Recommendations in French

Suspicious Killings and Extrajudicial Executions by Egyptian Security Forces

(Beirut, September 7, 2021) Egypt's Interior Ministry police and National Security Agency officers have in recent years apparently killed dozens of alleged terrorists across the country in unlawful extrajudicial executions they contend are shootouts, Human Rights Watch said in a report released today.

The 101-page report, Security Forces Dealt with Them: Suspicious Killings and Extrajudicial Executions by Egyptian Security Forces, found that the alleged armed militants killed in the so-called shootouts did not pose an imminent danger to security forces or others when they were killed and in many cases had already been in custody. Egypt's international partners should halt weapons transfers to Egypt and impose sanctions against the security agencies and officials most responsible for ongoing abuses.

Members of the Egyptian police special forces stand guard on Cairo's landmark Tahrir Square on January 25, 2016. 2016 Mohamed el-Shahed via Getty Images

(Beirut, September 7, 2021) Egypt's Interior Ministry police and National Security Agency officers have in recent years apparently killed dozens of alleged terrorists across the country in unlawful extrajudicial executions they contend are shootouts, Human Rights Watch said in a report released today.

The 101-page report, Security Forces Dealt with Them: Suspicious Killings and Extrajudicial Executions by Egyptian Security Forces, found that the alleged armed militants killed in the so-called shootouts did not pose an imminent danger to security forces or others, and so amounted to deliberate and unlawful killings. In all of the cases documented here, the individuals appear to have been in custody prior to being killed and some were forcibly disappeared by National Security Agency forces.

This report covers a pattern of suspicious killings and probable extrajudicial executions by Egyptian Interior Ministry forces of people who at the moment of their deaths apparently posed no life-threatening danger to security forces or others, and so amounted to deliberate and unlawful killings. In all of the cases documented here, the individuals appear to have been in custody prior to being killed and some were forcibly disappeared by National Security Agency forces.

Following the military ouster of President Mohamed Morsi in July 2013, and particularly after the August 2013 violent dispersal of the pro-Morsi Raba sit-in when security forces killed at least 817 protesters in one day, Egypt witnessed a sharp rise in violent attacks by an array of armed Islamist groups, against security forces, government facilities, and civilians. Government and Interior Ministry statements almost always blamed these attacks on the Muslim Brotherhood, one of Egypt's oldest and largest Islamist organization to which Morsi belonged and which was outlawed in 2013 following the military takeover.

Under the pretext of combating terrorism, President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi's government has effectively given the Interior Ministry's police and National Security Agency free rein to suppress all opposition, including peaceful dissent, with near-absolute impunity for grave abuses. The result has been one of the worst prolonged human rights crises in the country's recent history. Much of the reporting by human rights groups and investigative journalists has focused on the extralegal killings of peaceful protesters, mass arbitrary arrests, forced disappearances, and ill-treatment and torture in custody. This report looks at the suspicious killings and the probable extrajudicial executions of detained persons, most of whom had been in secret detention.

Between January 2015 and December 2020, according to 123 Interior Ministry statements and pro-government media reports citing unnamed security officials, security forces killed at least 755 alleged militants or terrorists in 143 alleged shootouts or gun battles in 19 governorates across the country. In most of these statements the authorities said those killed were members of the Muslim Brotherhood. Thirty-one of these incidents, involving the killings of 297 alleged militants, were in Egypt's North Sinai. Human Rights Watch has previously documented extrajudicial killings in North Sinai and this report focuses only on mainland Egypt. These incidents proliferated after President al-Sisi in June 2015 called for swift justice following major violent attacks.

This report documents the suspicious and probable extrajudicial execution of 14 individuals in 9 alleged shootout incidents in mainland Egypt in which, according to Interior Ministry statements, security forces killed a total of 75 men of whom only 21 were named. Human Rights Watch examined the Interior Ministry's statements regarding these 9 incidents, including analysis of the few photographs and videos available, and interviews with acquaintances or family members of 14 of those killed. All evidence indicates that these were probable extrajudicial executions.

The Interior Ministry statements rarely contained any meaningful information about the circumstances of these incidents, and only occasionally provided photographs or even names of those killed. Security forces dealt with the source of fire or security forces dealt with them, was the justification cited for the overwhelming majority of these killings. The statements typically claimed that security forces, based on intelligence gathered by the National Security Agency, were approaching a terrorist hideout when the alleged militants opened fire, requiring security forces to return fire. The result in almost every case was the deaths of all the alleged suspects. Human Rights Watch's analysis of the 123 official and quasi-official statements found that only one suspect was reported to have been captured alive in the 143 alleged shootouts while security forces casualties (47 wounded and 5 killed) were reported in only 10 of those alleged gun battles.

Operating with near-total impunity and lack of scrutiny of any sort, the Interior Ministry appeared not to care much whether its statements were convincing. They were often suspiciously pro-forma and sometimes incoherent. In one incident documented in this report, a pro-government newspaper had reported the arrest of a man and his subsequent interrogation over a week before the Interior Ministry subsequently claimed its forces killed him in a shootout. In another incident, the Interior Ministry announced the arrest of nine unnamed suspects of what they called the special operations unit of the Muslim Brotherhood in the morning, and in the evening said nine unnamed terrorists of the same unit were killed in a shootout.

For a multitude of reasons, including the government's severe restrictions on independent reporting, relentless efforts to silence human rights groups, and the lack of independence and inefficiency of Egypt's prosecution authorities in investigating the alleged shootouts, it is not possible to reach definite conclusions about many of these killings. However, Human Rights Watch found that the incidents documented in this report establish a clear pattern of apparently unlawful extrajudicial executions, in many cases of detainees who had previously been forcibly disappeared or who at the time of the killing posed no imminent danger to security forces or others.

In all nine alleged shootouts examined in this report, the statements did not indicate that any member of the security forces was killed or wounded. Members of eight of the 14 families said they saw what they believed were signs of abuse on the bodies of their killed relatives. In all 14 cases, family members said their killed relatives had been arrested and were in the custody of security agencies before the incidents in which they were reportedly killed. Eight of the 14 families said they or other people, including friends or acquaintances, had witnessed the arrest. Thirteen of the 14 families said their relative had been forcibly disappeared and that they had officially inquired about their whereabouts before their killing. Twelve families said they sent telegrams or letters to authorities, frequently the Interior Ministry or prosecution. Human Rights Watch reviewed copies of the telegrams in six of the cases.

Only one family said that the police informed them about the killing of their relative the next day; all the other 13 families said they received no official notice or information at any point. All the families but one said they had to actively seek information about the deaths and the location of the bodies of their relatives. The family of one man was only able to collect his body after two months, and families of two of those killed have not been able to collect their bodies since December 2018. At least 11 families said National Security officers intimidated and harassed them when they tried to locate the bodies of their relatives. Seven families said security forces escorted them from the morgue to the burial site to force them to bury their relatives without any funeral service, fearing that the family would photograph the body or that the funeral would turn into a spontaneous protest.

No family received a forensic or autopsy report or any further documents or information from the authorities about the circumstances of the killings or alleged shootouts, even though nine of the bodies appeared to have been dissected for autopsy. Authorities called none of the families to have a representative present during autopsy. Five families said they had still not received the death certificates as of time of writing.

Human Rights Watch found no record that authorities have opened any serious or meaningful investigations into any of the incidents documented in this report. All families said they had not been summoned for questioning as possible witnesses or otherwise requested to provide information that would indicate that any serious investigation was opened.

Only one family said their killed relative probably had been involved in armed activity. All the other families said their relatives had not been engaged in violence or political activity. Two families said their two relatives were killed during a journey to flee persecution in Egypt via its southern border with Sudan.

From official statements and the families accounts, it appears that the victims in these killings were men whom the security agencies believed belonged to, assisted, or financed violent, armed groups that emerged in the aftermath of the 2013 military coup such as Hasm and Liwa al-Thawra, regardless of evidence, and which the authorities said were armed branches of the Muslim Brotherhood. Analysis of the photographs and videos in three cases demonstrates the absence of evidence supporting the Interior Ministry's narrative and that bodies had been moved before being photographed. Three other photographs analyzed, including one concerning a case documented in this report, the hands of three deceased men that appear to have been restrained or cuffed immediately before their death. Another photo shows that a gun appeared to have been placed next to one of the men to stage a shootout. Arbitrary arrests and enforced disappearances violate international law and Egypt's constitution, which requires that all detainees be brought before a prosecutor within 24 hours. Egyptian laws do not explicitly define enforced disappearance, and insufficiently define and punish torture.

The right to life is an inherent non-derogable human right, regardless of the circumstances, even in times of armed conflict or states of emergency. Summary, extrajudicial, or arbitrary executions are clearly prohibited under international law, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights, to which Egypt is a state party.

Except for brief periods between 2012 and 2017, Egyptian security forces have been operating for four decades, since 1981, under a nationwide state of emergency as Egypt's draconian emergency law grants them unchecked powers. Since 2013, new laws further normalized abuses and lack of accountability in violation of the most basic international norms and standards. The 2015 counterterrorism law, for instance, includes an overly broad, abusive, definition of terrorism. It also gives security personnel full discretion to use force without judicial oversight, and immunizes them from criminal investigation even in cases where this use results in loss of life.

In the incidents documented in this report, Egyptian authorities failed to present any evidence or records indicating that use of lethal force was required. All available evidence suggests the contrary. Even when an exchange of fire may be justified, there are clear restrictions and obligations that Egyptian security forces appear to have violated.

Under international law, such as the 1990 UN Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, the use of potentially lethal force such as firearms is an extreme measure that should be only considered when strictly necessary in order to protect life or prevent serious injury from an imminent threat. It cannot, for example, be lawfully used to prevent the escape of a suspect or convict if that person did not pose an imminent threat. When unavoidable, officers should only use firearms with a view to minimize damage and injury, and respect and preserve human life. Officers should also ensure that medical aid is provided to wounded individuals as soon as possible. In none of the incidents documented in this report did the Interior Ministry say it had ordered ambulance services.

Given the potentially grave consequences of the use of lethal force, the UN Basic Principles require that law enforcement officials report in detail, and in a timely fashion, details of incidents in which officers used firearms and killed or wounded others. Such reporting includes ensuring that relatives or close friends of the injured or affected person are notified at the earliest possible moment.

According to the Basic Principles and other instruments of international law, in all cases involving use of firearms by officials persons affected and, in case of death, families of the deceased shall have access to an independent process, including a judicial process. Regarding the incidents investigated in this report, the authorities permitted families little or no access to police or forensic reports, relevant documents or information, or independent judicial or administrative redress mechanisms. Photographs that the Interior Ministry occasionally published of the alleged shootout scenes appeared to show that bodies of the deceased had been moved and that the basic elements of preserving the crime scene were not met.

The 2016 updated UN Manual on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, widely known as the Minnesota Protocol, offers step-by-step guidelines and principles that governments should apply in investigating any potentially unlawful deaths.

According to the protocols guidelines, the duty to investigate is triggered not only in a clear case of unlawful death, but also where there are reasonable allegations of a potentially unlawful death. The duty to investigate is applicable even if authorities do not receive a formal complaint. For persons in detention centers, as at least nine of the individuals whose killings are documented in this report appear to have been, the Protocol states: Owing to the control exercised by the State over those it holds in custody, there is a general presumption of state responsibility in such cases .

Of relevance to the cases of killings documented in this report is the obligation of the authorities to identify, summon, and interview all possible witnesses. This should include door-to-door visits and inquiries in the area surrounding the killings and any other physical location of importance to the investigation.

Steps the Egyptian authorities have taken concerning the killings documented in this report do not even begin to comply with the most basic elements of the protocols guidelines, even in the most superficial sense. The Interior Ministry almost always claimed that any investigations into alleged shootouts were handled by the Supreme State Security Prosecution (SSSP), the branch of the general prosecution that typically rubber-stamps security forces allegations and almost never investigates accounts of torture or enforced disappearance.

The Prosecutor General should remove the SSSP from overseeing investigations into possible security forces abuses. President al-Sisi should direct the Justice Ministry to create an independent committee with sufficient resources and authority to promptly carry out thorough and impartial investigations into all killings by Interior Ministry forces including possible extrajudicial executions.

This report should be read in the context of previous reporting by Human Rights Watch and other groups, providing evidence of the continuing grave abuses committed by authorities in Egypt, particularly by the Interior Ministry and its National Security Agency, including systematic, widespread arbitrary detentions, enforced disappearances, and torture.

Human Rights Watch calls on the UN Human Rights Council to establish an independent international mechanism to monitor and report on the human rights situation in Egypt, and to investigate grave human rights violations and security forces abuses including but not limited to extrajudicial executions, torture, and enforced disappearances.

Given the level of abuses by Egypt's Interior Ministry and military forces, documented in this and previous reports, including in North Sinai, Egypt's international partners should halt all security and military assistance and weapons transfers to the Egyptian government and condition their resumption on an end to grave human rights abuses and transparent investigations of serious crimes. They should also impose targeted sanctions on officials and entities responsible for such ongoing abuses, and where possible, investigate them under universal jurisdiction principles.

The recommendations detailed here are meant to address, ensure accountability for, and deter the serious human rights abuses documented in this report and previously documented ongoing systematic abuses, including enforced disappearances and torture.

For this report, Human Rights Watch created a database of 165 official and quasi-official statements made by the Interior Ministry and pro-government media about shootout incidents between January 2015 and December 2020. Of those statements, 123 concerned shootouts with armed men whom the government invariably described in terms such as terrorists or militants.

To identify these statements Human Rights Watch monitored the Interior Ministry's official accounts on Twitter and Facebook and used key terms such as terrorism, terrorists, or hideout to search for and find older posts. Human Rights Watch did not include statements about security raids that did not report a shooting. Human Rights Watch also used the aforementioned key words to find statements in government and pro-government media that were not published on the official Interior Ministry social media pages. This report does not include militants or security personnel killed in major attacks by armed militants on security forces.

Human Rights Watch investigated nine of the alleged shootout incidents that took place in mainland Egypt (excluding the Sinai Peninsula), in which 75 alleged armed militants were killed. Researchers interviewed 13 relatives or friends of 14 of them. Human Rights Watch also interviewed three human rights lawyers, three human rights activists and a journalist who worked on or covered extrajudicial killings. All the interviews were done remotely, except two, which were conducted in person. Two of the 14 cases were introduced to Human Rights Watch by We Record, a human rights group, and the two interviews concerning those two cases were conducted jointly with an Istanbul-based researcher with We Record. Human Rights Watch reviewed media reports and investigations of the cases by Egyptian human rights groups.

A Human Rights Watch researcher analyzed 52 photographs and three videos concerning six individuals killed in three of the nine alleged shootouts. They show the alleged shootout scenes and dead bodies. The government published 35 of them and the rest were provided by activists and family members. This visual evidence was also reviewed by the Independent Forensic Expert Group of the International Rehabilitation Council for Torture Victims, including Professor Dr. Onder Ozkalipci, the Groups steering committee member and a forensic physician, Professor James Lin, the Groups coordinator and a legal and forensic expert, and by Stefan Schmitt, International Forensic Manager of the National Forensic Science and Technology Center at Florida International University and former director of the International Forensic Program at Physicians for Human Rights.

This report also highlights and includes additional research into the probable extrajudicial execution of 10 detainees in two separate incidents in mainland Egypt in 2015 that Human Rights Watch had documented in previous reports.

Human Rights Watch on two occasions sent detailed questions to Interior Minister Mahmoud Tawfiq and Prosecutor General Hamada al-Sawy, on April 27 and May 11 2021. Copies of the letters were also sent to the State Information Service, the National Council for Human Rights, and the spokesperson of the Egyptian cabinet. At the time of publication, the authorities had not responded. The letters are in the annex of the report.

All interviewees have been given pseudonyms and some personal details were omitted because of security considerations. Egyptian authorities have routinely harassed, intimidated, arrested, and sometimes prosecuted witnesses to serious human rights abuses.

All persons interviewed were informed of the purpose of the interview, its voluntary nature, and the ways in which the information would be used. Human Rights Watch conducted the remote interviews using encrypted applications, wherever possible, to ensure the security of interviewees. None of those interviewed received monetary or other incentives for speaking with Human Rights Watch. All interviews were conducted in Arabic.

Widespread suspicious and extrajudicial killings are not unprecedented in Egypt's recent history. From the late 1980s through the late 1990s, when the government confronted rising Islamist armed militancy, the Interior Ministry arrested thousands of peaceful as well as violent opponents and was reportedly involved in the extrajudicial killings of alleged Islamist militants.^[1] During the decade spanning the late 1980s to the late 1990s, the Interior Ministry killed hundreds of alleged Islamist militants.^[2]

In a 1993 report, Amnesty International wrote:

In a 1995 report on hostage-taking by security forces, Human Rights Watch reported a number of cases of possible extrajudicial executions in what appeared to be staged shootouts^[4] Some 20 years later, in 2016, Mohamed Thalab, a former deputy interior minister, in a BBC documentary about violence under former President Hosni Mubarak, claimed that minister Zaki Badr, who led the ministry from 1986 to 1990, had effectively endorsed a ministry policy of extrajudicial executions:

In the same documentary, well-known former general and security analyst Fouad Allam, who was also the deputy director of the State Security Investigations (SSI, the name of the National Security Agency until 2011), said that there were orders at the time to shoot them in the heart, referring to Islamist armed militants.^[6] They [security] carried out assassinations of members of the [Islamist] groups, he added.^[7]

Killings of alleged armed militants largely subsided in the late 1990s, after the Islamist group al-Gamaa al-Islamiya renounced violence and security agencies had suppressed and dismantled violent Islamist groups.

More than 10 years after the violent events of the 1990s, and during the 18 days of the 2011 nationwide uprising against President Hosni Mubarak, Interior Ministry security forces killed hundreds of peaceful protesters.^[8] Following Mubarak's ouster, and faced with public euphoria and demands for accountability, Mubarak's immediate successors, his own military generals, the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces, created an interim government and allowed superficial investigations into some of these killings, but almost all the soldiers and officers prosecuted for killing demonstrators were acquitted in court proceedings that lacked any serious efforts to produce evidence and to hold perpetrators accountable.^[9]

Security and military forces continued to kill protesters in the months following Mubarak's ouster with impunity^[10] But the worst was yet to come. General Abdel Fattah al-Sisi, then minister of defense, oversaw the largest mass killings of protesters in Egypt's recent history in August 2013. The military had just overthrown the elected president, Mohamed Morsi, in July 2013, and imprisoned him and his main advisers. On August 14 that year, the military and the police moved to violently disperse tens of thousands of individuals who gathered in Cairo's Raba Square and elsewhere to protest Morsi's removal.^[11] Over the course of July and August, security forces killed over 1,150 protesters, including at least 817 in Raba Square alone.^[12]

A year after the massacre, in June 2014, al-Sisi became president, winning 96.1 percent of the electoral vote that lacked any meaningful competition.^[13]

In the years since, al-Sisi government has faced violent attacks by armed political groups against security forces and civilians. Grave abuses became normal daily news.^[14] In the following months, security forces killed hundreds and abducted, disappeared, and tortured thousands of protesters and dissidents. Members and sympathizers of the Muslim Brotherhood, Egypts oldest and largest Islamist organization, with offshoots throughout the Arab world and the group to which Morsy belonged, were the main target for security forces despite, in many cases, not presenting evidence of the individuals involvement in violence.^[15] Soon arbitrary arrests, abductions, and forcible disappearances victimized men and women from all walks of life, including journalists, academics, human rights defenders, and social media critics.^[16] Since 2015 the repression has included hundreds of gay and trans people and LGBT activists, and women social media influencers whom the government viewed as immoral.^[17]

One of the gravest abuses of al-Sisis security forces has been widespread enforced disappearances.^[18] At one level this has been a tactic to terrorize critics and dissidents and sharply raise the cost of criticizing the government. Security officers have also wanted to ensure they can extract information and coerce video-recorded confessions without even a semblance of judicial or public scrutiny.^[19] Human Rights Watch and other organizations have documented how, under al-Sisi government, the Interior Ministrys National Security Agency in particular forcibly disappeared and tortured detainees to extract information or confessions, or to punish them, on a scale that likely amounts to crimes against humanity.^[20]

An example of the security mentality justifying the practice of enforced disappearance are the words of a National Security Agency officer to a detainee he interrogated while forcibly disappeared for weeks in mid-2015:

Such a mentality, effectively viewing the rule of law as incompatible with security, was reflected in statements by President al-Sisi himself on June 30, 2015, in response to the assassination of Public Prosecutor Hisham Barakat a day earlier. The hand of justice is chained by laws, he said, adding that we will amend the laws to achieve swift justice. Clearly referring to imprisoned Brotherhood leaders, al-Sisi said, They are giving the orders from their prison cells.^[22]

Less than two days following Barakats assassination, security forces carried out what appeared to be the extrajudicial killings of nine high-profile, detained Muslim Brotherhood leaders.^[23] The incident received significant media coverage. Security officers arrested several journalists who tried to visit the building where the killings took place.^[24] The coverage this incident received may have been a reason that security agencies have avoided easily accessible locations in subsequent alleged shootouts.

Six weeks later, on August 15, 2015, al-Sisi decreed a counterterrorism law that gives security personnel immunity from any criminal investigation for any use of lethal force during operations.^[25] Further reflecting a mentality that problematizes the rule of a law, al-Sisi said a month later, in September 2015, that the 2014 constitution was written in good will. But countries are not built by good will alone.^[26]

Since July 2015, Egypt has witnessed a spree of suspicious killings by security forces. The Interior Ministry released more than 123 statements claiming its forces killed terrorists, ikhwanis (members of the Muslim Brotherhood), suspects or militants in hideouts. Many families of those killed told journalists and human rights groups that their relatives had previously been arrested and forcibly disappeared.^[27] In some cases the Interior Ministry claimed that those killed in a shootout were responsible for a specific armed attack, but weeks or months later would announce the arrest or the shootout deaths of another group of alleged militants, claiming they were responsible for the same attack.^[28]

The killings of previously detained persons have been difficult to document and received little media coverage because of government restrictions on human rights work and investigative reporting, the Interior Ministrys practice of shrouding its operations in secrecy, and the failure of the Egyptian judiciary to exercise its duty to investigate abuses.^[29]

It appears that the main victims in these numerous shootouts have been men whom the security agencies believed, in many cases apparently without evidence, to have belonged to, assisted, or financed Islamist armed groups.^[30] Following Morsys ouster, and particularly following the Raba massacre, Egypt witnessed a sharp rise in attacks on security forces, government facilities, and civilians by Islamist armed groups including those affiliated with al-Qaeda and the Islamic State (ISIS).^[31] These groups have been most active in North Sinai, where the Egyptian security forces and military have been battling an ISIS affiliate since 2013.^[32]

Apart from ISIS and al-Qaeda, other smaller Islamist armed groups emerged and claimed violent attacks in mainland Egypt, most prominently al-Eqab al-Thawry (Revolutionary Punishment) in February 2015, Hasm (an acronym for the Arms of Egypt Movement) in July 2016, and Liwa al-Thawra (Revolution Brigade) in August 2016.^[33] These groups and others have been responsible for attacks that killed and wounded dozens of police and military officers and soldiers, as well as civilians, and destroyed public property, particularly between late 2013 and 2018.^[34] They have only occasionally acknowledged the affiliation of or publicly mourned any members killed in the alleged shootouts.^[35]

The discourse of these smaller groups invoked the 2013 military coup and abuses by security forces as their main grievances, rather than claiming they were fighting a broader battle to establish an Islamic Caliphate or goals similar to those articulated by ISIS or al-Qaeda.^[36] Furthermore, they published statements diverging from the position of ISIS and al-Qaeda that Egypts leaders and officers are kuffar (non-believers) who should be fought for that reason.^[37] Some of these groups, particularly Hasm and Liwa al-Thawra, denounced attacks against Christians in an apparent attempt to distance themselves from other armed Islamists, claiming that they were only targeting security forces.^[38] Security and political analysts, including some who are close the Brotherhood, believe that many of the members and leaders of these newer, smaller groups in mainland Egypt possibly had links to or broke off from the Muslim Brotherhood after 2013 as they became dissatisfied with the groups political strategy and leadership that historically renounced violence in the 1970s.^[39] In the years following the coup, the Brotherhood leaders and figures, at best, gave contradictory statements regarding violence; its leadership was clearly divided and fragmented as an overwhelming number of its first- and second-tier leaders were forced into prisons or exile.^[40]

In January 2018, the United States government designated Hasm and Liwa al-Thawra as terrorist organizations under the Specially Designated Global Terrorists Act.^[41] This followed the designation of Ajnad Masr as a terrorist group in December 2014.^[42]

The Egyptian government in its official statements labeled all these newer groups as special operations units, referring to what they alleged to be an armed wing of the Muslim Brotherhood, as if they were all one and the same.^[43] The government moved swiftly in late 2013 to officially designate the Brotherhood, which had hundreds of thousands of members, as a terrorist organization in order to justify its nationwide crackdown against anyone with the slightest alleged connection to the group.^[44]

The Interior Ministry statements announcing the killings of alleged armed militants or terrorists usually named the Brotherhood (ikhwan), Hasm, and other groups interchangeably. Even from an intelligence standpoint, a distinction between those who supported violent opposition and those who did not was apparently immaterial for the governments purpose of using counterterrorism to criminalize all forms of dissent, including peaceful activism.^[45]

The government has used terrorism allegations to arbitrarily arrest, detain, forcibly disappear, and torture activists and dissidents across the political spectrum including journalists, academics and human rights defenders.^[46] Those whom security agencies believed were members or supporters of the Brotherhood or other Islamist groups faced another risk in detention extrajudicial killing.

Be careful, if you join one of these cells, you wont get any help from the judicial system, an unnamed Western security official monitoring the situation from Cairo told the Wall Street Journal.^[47] The Egypt chapters in the US State Department annual human rights country reports have noted reports on extrajudicial executions since at least 2017.^[48]

In 2017, 2018, and 2019, Human Rights Watch documented the probable extrajudicial executions of forcibly disappeared detainees in war-torn North Sinai where the military and police have been battling an ISIS-affiliated group called Wilayat Sina.^[49] This includes a report in March 2017 documenting the probable extrajudicial killings of at least four, and as many as ten, men in al-Arish, in which an official video of the alleged security raid appeared to be doctored to cover up the killings.^[50] This report focuses only on security forces killings in mainland Egypt.

In recent years, several officials made statements that could be interpreted as implying security forces have a right to battle and kill dissidents. Ali Goma, Egypts former Grand Mufti, the countrys highest religious authority, whose religious opinions (fatwas) are officially sought on many issues including by courts considering death sentences, made statements concerning the killing of Raba protesters.^[51] In an August 18, 2013 speech in presence of the interior and defense ministers as well as the most senior military and police commanders, just four days after the Raba massacre, Goma appeared to be referring to those who opposed the forced ouster of President Morsy or who touch the Egyptian military as kuffar (nonbelievers) and khawarij (a word used to refer to an Islamic sect that should be fought as illegitimate).^[52] Parts of the speech were broadcast on Egypts government TV and other alleged parts of the speech, including an apparent call for killings, were leaked in October that year.^[53] A statement by Gomas office did not deny he made such statements but claimed he was referring to armed groups in Sinai.^[54]

Egyptys Dar al-Ifta (House of Fatwa) has issued numerous statements describing members of the Muslim Brotherhood as terrorists, kuffar or khawarij and urging the military and police operations to battle them. The statements apparently endorse the blanket government crackdown on anyone with links to the Brotherhood, without clarifying in what context such battling or killings would be legal from an Islamic point of view and whether, for example, the killings of people in state custody would be legal.^[55]

Many of the alleged shootouts were announced by the Interior Ministry a few days, sometimes as soon as a day or two, after attacks that killed or wounded security forces. This was the case in at least six of the alleged shootout killings documented in this report. An element to consider when investigating such killings is the security forces rather explicit expression of wanting to avenge their killed colleagues. Government officials, including President al-Sisi, have frequently used terms such as revenge, avenge, the right of our martyrs, and avenging the blood of our martyrs in their statements.^[56]

On February 1, 2015, al-Sisi addressed hundreds of the most senior military and police leaders. Our meeting today with you is very important, he said, and then angrily shouted:

Al-Sisi made these televised statements two days after Wilayat Sina attacks that killed dozens of police and army soldiers and officers in North Sinai.^[58] It was just one of many similar calls.^[59] On the same day al-Sisi made these remarks, a low-ranking police officer (amin shorta) shot and killed a wounded suspect attacker named Mohamed Atia al-Sayed, whom he was guarding at a Cairo hospital. Al-Sayed had been detained and hospitalized following an alleged shootout a week earlier.^[60]

The governmental National Council for Human Rights mentions in its annual reports since 2016 that it has received hundreds of complaints of enforced disappearance.^[61] Its 2018 report said that the Councils communications with the Interior Ministry revealed that in the majority of those cases the people had been forcibly disappeared.^[62] There is no mention of extrajudicial killings, but in its 2019 report the Council said it had received a complaint about an incident involving a criminal suspect in Gharbiya governorate whom police arrested at home on October 28, 2018, and later executed in a desert area. The 2019 report mentioned that prosecutors were investigating but as of writing Human Rights Watch could not find any information about the results of any investigation.^[63]

Human Rights Watch reviewed 165 official and quasi-official statements released about killings in alleged shootouts between January 2015 and December 2020. Of the 165 statements, approximately 123 concerned 143 incidents of alleged shootouts that involved alleged terrorists, and the others not discussed in this report involved shootouts with alleged criminal or drug gangs.^[64] Most of the 123 statements were official, meaning they were released on the ministries official Facebook page and Twitter account. The other statements were reported in local media, attributed to unidentified security officials.

Interior Ministry officials claimed in the 123 statements concerning the 143 alleged shootout incidents that its forces killed 755 alleged terrorists, usually referred to as cadres or elements of the terrorist Muslim Brotherhood, Hasm, or other organizations, in 19 governorates.^[65]

The Interior Ministry statements routinely provided no meaningful information about the circumstances, only occasionally providing the names and more rarely photographs of those killed. Of the 755 individuals killed, only 141 were named. Some statements said that those killed were still being identified but did not issue any further clarification. Only 21 statements were accompanied by photographs of the dead. The Interior Ministrys justification for these killings was almost always that security forces had dealt with the source of fire. The statements in almost every case claimed that security forces, based on intelligence gathered by the National Security Agency, had identified a terrorist hideout, obtained permission from Supreme State Security Prosecution to raid the place, prepared a raiding force, and while approaching the hideout the alleged terrorists opened fire, compelling the security forces to return fire. The alleged shootout almost always resulted in the killing of all the terrorists.

One telling indication of how suspicious these shootout killings are is that, out of all 143 reported incidents, only in one incident, in June 2015, did officials report that one man was arrested after being wounded. The review found that only in four shootouts were the alleged armed militants or terrorists (at least six of them) reported to have been able to escape. A total of 47 members of the security forces were reported wounded (in 7 incidents) and 5 killed (in 3 incidents). None of the 123 statements indicated that officials had notified ambulances or emergency medical aid to be available to attend to or evacuate wounded suspects despite their obligation to do so under international law.

Operating with near-total impunity and lack of oversight of any sort, the Interior Ministry appeared not to care much whether its statements were compelling or convincing. Almost all used pro-forma language and routinely offered no details about the specific location where the alleged gun battle took place, usually providing only a vague sense of location. The statements also rarely offered details about the numbers or the identity of the raiding forces, the time of the raid beyond the date, whether any civilians were harmed or whether any civilian property was damaged all details one would expect to find in an official statement about an actual shootout, particularly when it allegedly occurred in a residential area where reporting by media and residents could be expected.^[66]

One exception that, in contrast, illustrates missing elements of credibility in the Interior Ministry statements, was a shootout that occurred on April 20, 2020 in al-Amiriya neighborhood in Cairo which did exceptionally have dozens of witnesses. Several videos of the events by residents and journalists went viral.^[67] The videos show that the exchange of fire lasted for hours and gunshots were clearly heard while security forces surrounded and slowly approached the apartment where the armed militants were.^[68] The Interior Ministry warned residents in nearby buildings to avoid looking out of their windows and shut down the power grid in the whole area. One National Security Agency officer was killed in the shootout. By late evening, the Interior Ministry said it killed all seven terrorists that were in the building even though no explanation was given why no one was arrested.^[69] There is virtually no such reporting capturing the events in the dozens of incidents since 2015 that the Interior Ministry characterized as shootouts.

Many statements gave at best only a rough idea of the weapons or ammunition seized.

Some of the Interior Ministry statements included other suspicious elements. In a May 2020 statement, the ministry posted photographs of the terrorists allegedly killed but the photographs were actually of individuals killed months or years earlier.^[70] The ministry removed the photos after activists exposed the discrepancy.^[71] In another instance, the Interior Ministry said that on March 16, 2020 its forces killed six "terrorist elements" in a shootout in Baer al-Abd, in North Sinai. A statement about two months later, on May 23, said its forces killed 21 more armed militants in Baer al-Abd, but some of the photographs published of both incidents appear to have been taken inside the same house or building.^[72]

The statements frequently labeled those killed as members of the terrorist Muslim Brotherhood or other groups that the authorities link to them, such as Hasm. Sometimes the statements mentioned the case numbers in which the killed individuals had been prosecuted or wanted. In many cases, they alleged the individuals were responsible for certain attacks or involved in killings of officers without providing evidence for such claims.^[73] In some cases, the Interior Ministry alleged that armed militants killed in separate shootouts months or years apart were responsible for the same attack or killing of an officer. Sometimes such killings occurred after the Interior Ministry had announced the arrest of alleged suspects or after authorities had charged them.^[74]

It is not possible to reach definite conclusions about the hundreds of killings in alleged shootouts in recent years, given that the Interior Ministry rarely provides even the most rudimentary information, such as the names of those killed. But the investigations of the nine incidents documented in this report, even with the limited available information, show the hallmarks of apparently extrajudicial executions of persons already in custody, in some cases forcibly disappeared. Other cases appear to involve people who at the moment they were killed posed no threat to security forces or anyone else and could have been arrested.

The following section in this report examines the Interior Ministry's statements about 9 incidents which took place between July 2015 and September 2019 in which 75 persons were killed. The section draws on analysis of the limited number of photographs and videos available and interviews with acquaintances or family members of 14 of those killed. All evidence indicates that these were probable extrajudicial executions that represent a broader pattern. In four of the nine incidents, the alleged shootouts occurred in a confined space such as an apartment in a multi-story residential building. One incident was inside a car on a highway, another in a tent in a desert area. The statements about the other three incidents did not specify the nature of the location. The Interior Ministry statements named only 21 of the 75 killed. In all nine incidents, the statements did not indicate that any member of the security forces was killed or wounded. Members of eight families said they saw what they believed were signs of abuse on the bodies of their killed relatives, including shoe marks on the face, burn and cut wounds, and broken bones or dislocated teeth. Human Rights Watch obtained and reviewed non-official photographs and videos showing the bodies of five of those killed in these incidents, in addition to official photographs showing two other men whose deaths are documented in this report.

In all 14 cases family members said their killed relatives had been arrested and were in the custody of security agencies before the incidents in which they were reportedly killed. Eight of the 14 families said they or other people, friends or acquaintances, witnessed the arrest. Thirteen of 14 families said their relative had been forcibly disappeared and that they had officially inquired about their whereabouts before their killing. Twelve families said they sent telegrams or letters to authorities, frequently the Interior Ministry or prosecution, seeking information about their loved ones. Human Rights Watch reviewed copies of the telegrams in six of the cases.

Only one family said that the police informed them about the killing of their relative the next day; all the other 13 families said they received no official notice or information at any point. All the families but one said they had to actively seek information about the deaths and the location of the bodies of their relatives. The family of one man was only able to collect his body after two months, and families of two of those killed have not been able to collect their bodies since December 2018. Nine of the 14 families said they needed security authorization or Supreme State Security Prosecution permission to collect the bodies of their relatives. At least 11 families said National Security officers intimidated and harassed them when they tried to locate the bodies of their relatives. Seven families said security forces escorted them from the morgue to the burial site to force them to bury their relatives without any funeral or service, fearing that the family would photograph the body or that the funeral would turn into a spontaneous protest. No family received a forensic or autopsy report or any further documents or information from the authorities about the circumstances of the killings or alleged shootouts, even though nine of the bodies appeared to have been dissected for autopsy. Authorities called none of the families to allow them to have a representative present during autopsy. Five families said they had not even received the death certificates as of time of writing. Human Rights Watch found no record that authorities have opened any serious or meaningful investigations into any of the incidents documented in this report. All families said they were not summoned for questioning as possible witnesses or otherwise requested to file any information that would indicate that any serious investigation was opened.

Only one family said their killed relative probably had been involved in armed activity. Two families said their two relatives were killed during a journey to leave Egypt's southern border to Sudan, fleeing persecution, with the help of smugglers. All the other families said their relatives had not been engaged in violence or political activity.

Almost all the official statements mentioned near the end that legal measures were taken and that the Supreme State Security Prosecution is investigating the incident, without further explanation.^[75] The Supreme State Security Prosecution is an abusive branch of public prosecution that largely backs up often unsubstantiated allegations by the security authorities. It has also supported the unlawful detention of peaceful activists and dissidents, and has almost uniformly failed to investigate allegations of wrongdoing by security officials, including torture as well as unlawful killings.^[76]

Even in cases with strong material evidence that the murdered men had been in state custody when they were killed, Human Rights Watch could find no indication that authorities carried out any serious investigation or held any one accountable. One such incident that Human Rights Watch investigated earlier and received unusually wide coverage in Egyptian media at the time was the killing in May 2015 of Ain Shams University student Islam Atito.^[77] Human Rights Watch documented how security agencies probably abducted the final-year engineering student on May 19, 2015 as he finished a school exam.^[78] According to witnesses, university surveillance camera recordings collected by prosecutors and seen by a professor supervising him, as well as several media and human rights reports, two or three men chased Atito and pushed him into a car near the university.^[79] Atitos family told Human Rights Watch that they searched for him at hospitals and police stations that day and filed reports with police inquiring about his whereabouts. The next day, May 20, a short Interior Ministry statement announced Atito was an ikhwani (Muslim Brother) militant who had been killed in a desert hideout after he had opened fire on pursuing security forces. The statement claimed he was responsible for killing a police officer, Wael Tahoun, in April 2015.^[80] The Interior Ministry had already arrested separately two groups of alleged militants in the weeks before Atitos killing, claiming they had confessed they were responsible for Tahoun's killing.^[81] Atito regularly attended his classes and reportedly had no noticeable absence from school or political involvement.^[82] His family said they saw signs of abuse on his body.^[83] Despite all of this compelling evidence, no officer was apparently questioned or found guilty of Atitos probable abduction and extrajudicial killing. Instead, his younger brother, Ihab, was reported arrested in September 2016. The Egyptian Center for Economic and Social Rights, a prominent rights group, said authorities forcibly disappeared Ihab Atito for over two months. He remains in custody at time of writing.

Atitos killing was only the beginning of a barrage of such cases.

One of the first reported alleged shootout incidents involving probable extrajudicial executions occurred on July 1, 2015 when Interior Ministry forces killed nine Muslim Brothers, including several well-known senior leaders, in an apartment in October 6 City in Giza.

In an investigation published on July 31, 2015 Human Rights Watch concluded that these killings may have been extrajudicial executions, based on strong evidence including interviews with 11 relatives and witnesses with knowledge of the incident.^[84] The evidence suggested that security forces had arrested, fingerprinted, and tortured the men before killing them.^[85] The killings appeared to be in retaliation for the assassination of Prosecutor General Hisham Barakat two days earlier, which the authorities immediately tried to link to the Muslim Brotherhood.^[86] During Barakat's funeral, President al-Sisi publicly complained that the hands of justice were tied by laws and asserted:

The Interior Ministry, in an official statement issued the evening of July 1, claimed that security agencies were examining the confiscated material which could help identify those who carried out the killing of the Prosecutor General, a further indication of the retaliatory nature of these killings.^[88] The statement said that its forces had killed nine men involved in the Brotherhoods special operations committees responsible for acts of terrorism and vandalism.^[89] The statement claimed that intelligence indicated that Abdel Fattah Ibrahim Attia, a Brotherhood leader described as the main engine of the committees, was convening an organizational meeting with other leaders of the special operations committees. When security forces approached the apartment where they were meeting, the statement claimed, they were shot at, and therefore quickly fired back, killing Attia and eight others.^[90]

The Brotherhood denied the governments narrative and said that the killed leaders were not armed and were peaceful members of a committee overseeing the support of the Brotherhoods martyrs and wounded.^[91]

The ministry's statement raised more questions than answers. It did not, for example, explain why, if the Interior Ministry had such intelligence, security forces did not arrest Attia or any others on their way to the meeting. The statement did not name the other eight victims but said two of them had previously been sentenced to death in absentia in cases of alleged violence. The statement claimed that security forces seized three rifles, six magazines, and 132 bullets. There was no mention of any bullet casings. The statement said three members of the raiding force were injured but gave no details.^[92]

Another element of suspicion, one that amounts to an official acknowledgement that the men had been captured alive, was an Interior Ministry statement just a few hours earlier on July 1 saying it had arrested nine members of the Brotherhoods special operations committees the day before, on June 30.^[93] No names were mentioned. The Interior Ministry deleted this statement or made it inaccessible sometime in 2021.

El-Watan, a pro-government newspaper, in a one-line report published between the two ministry statements, said that security forces had succeeded in liquidating nine Brotherhood leaders, citing an unnamed security source.^[94] The newspaper named one of those killed, Nasser al-Hafy, a leader of the dissolved Brotherhoods Freedom and Justice Party who was an elected member of the 2012 parliament.

A lawyer who asked not to be named and who had represented Sayed Dwedat, one of the nine men killed, said that Dwedat's driver, who had driven Dwedat to the meeting that morning, called the lawyer at 11 a.m. to say that Dwedat was being arrested. The driver, who was waiting outside the apartment building, said that a large number of security forces had gathered in the area and some had entered the building.^[95] The driver did not mention hearing any shooting, but the lawyer did not ask. The driver was then unreachable after a brief follow-up call that evening, the lawyer said.^[96]

The families of the unnamed men killed in the incident learned about the fate of their relatives later that evening when Mekameleen, a pro-Brotherhood TV station, and other media outlets published the list of names and photographs of the nine killed.^[97]

As Human Rights Watch reported at the time, Dwedat's lawyer and nine relatives of those killed said that most of the bodies bore signs of abuse, including stab wounds, broken bones, and marks from electric shocks. At least four of the nine had been shot in the head, relatives said. The lawyer, who said he had significant experience in fatal shooting incidents, told Human Rights Watch that one of the head wounds bore a circular burn mark, indicating the man had been shot at point-blank range.^[98]

Burial permission forms issued by the Health Ministry, viewed by Human Rights Watch, stated that most of the nine men died of gunshots, broken bones, and lacerated internal organs.^[99] Today, nearly seven years after the incident, no credible investigation has taken place, and no relatives of the deceased have been called to offer their accounts despite families' official complaints against the Interior Ministry.

The incident received significant coverage at the time by government and non-government media. Security agencies arrested several journalists who tried to visit the building where the killings took place.^[100] Apparently one of the lessons security agencies learned was to avoid carrying out alleged shootouts in an easily identifiable and accessible location.

One of the two families of the killed men that Human Rights Watch had not been able to reach in 2015 is that of Mutasim Ahmed al-Agizi. Al-Agizi, 25, was a sales representative for a pharmaceutical company from Mahlet Abu Ali village, in Gharbia governorate.^[101] He was one of eight of the men who were living in cities in Nile Delta and traveled to October 6 City for the July 1 meeting. Yasin, a relative of al-Agizi, said that he had left his family home in the early morning that day, and drove his car to Cairo.^[102] We were together until dawn. It was Ramadan and we had Sohor [the meal before day-time fasting] together, Yasin said. He said that al-Agizi had still been active with the Muslim Brotherhood following the 2013 military takeover. Around noon that day, the family received information from friends of al-Agizi that he was arrested. In the early afternoon, a low-ranking security officer arrived at the family homes in Gharbia and asked about al-Agizi but gave no information.^[103]

Unlike several of the men killed in this incident, al-Agizi, who studied in the faculty of science at Mansoura University, was not wanted by authorities at the time and had no cases against him, Yasin said. Al-Agizi's father, however, was a senior Brotherhood leader and has been detained since the August 2013 events that followed the dispersal of the pro-Morsy Raba sit-in and was sentenced to 15 years in a flawed mass trial.^[104]

Yasin said that three family members were able to collect al-Agizi's body shortly after it was transported by ambulance to the Zeinohm morgue in Giza. He added that the family arranged a funeral and buried him in the early morning hours of July 2. Security forces were present at the funeral with an armored vehicle and two police cars, Yasin said.^[105]

Al-Agizis family filed a complaint with the police to retrieve his car and other belongings, including his wallet, mobile phone, a tablet, and some documents. The family received an unofficial call from an officer who knew the family, who said that they will not get the car or any of Mutasims belongings back because of the other complaint they filed against officials about the killings, Yasin said. The family received al-Agizis eyeglasses and a wristwatch he was wearing when he was killed.[\[106\]](#)

Al-Agizis burial permission, seen by Human Rights Watch, stated that he died from five bullet wounds to the stomach, lacerated internal organs, and broken bones.[\[107\]](#)

An Interior Ministry statement on December 6, 2016 said that security forces killed three members of Hasm in a shootout in Assiut governorate, in southern Egypt: Abdelrahman Gamal from Minya, and Mohamed Said Zaki and Alaa Ragab Owais, both from the adjacent Bani Suef governorate.[\[108\]](#) The statement said that the three were wanted by the State Security Prosecution in Case 724 of 2016 for alleged armed attacks.[\[109\]](#) The statement used the usual wording: the Interior Ministrys National Security Agency gathered intelligence about a hideout of alleged leaders of the military wing of the terrorist [Brotherhood] organization. The ministry prepared a force to raid the hideout, but when they approached the militants abruptly fired at the security agents, who dealt with the source of fire, resulting in the deaths of the three men.[\[110\]](#) The statement mentioned that the hideout was a two-story building in Bani Shaaran village, in the town of Manflout, Assiut, close to the western desert road.[\[111\]](#)

The statement said that Abdelrahman Gamal was responsible for manufacturing explosive devices and providing training for other members on their manufacture. Alaa Ragab Owais was responsible for the assassination group. And Mohamed Said Zaki was the leader of Hasm in Bani Suef. The statement named several officers whose earlier killings the three had allegedly been involved in.[\[112\]](#)

The statement said that after searching the site, security forces seized three 7.62 x 39 millimeter rifles, seven bullet magazines and ammunition of the same caliber, and documents related to their armed activities. In its coverage of the incident, the pro-government Albawabh news site cited unnamed security officials who denied allegations that the three had been forcibly disappeared before their deaths.[\[113\]](#)

Evidence Human Rights Watch gathered suggests otherwise. Their families and human rights groups said the three were arrested separately, in August and October 2016, and disappeared for several months prior to the date of the alleged shootout. The independent Egyptian Commission for Rights and Freedoms (ECRF) said, after the ministry announcement of the killings, that it had previously documented the arrest and incommunicado detention of Mohamed Said Zaki.[\[114\]](#) The ECRF said that while Zaki was shopping with his wife on al-Arish street in Giza on October 9, 2016, men in plain clothes abducted him, put him in an unmarked microbus, and drove away.[\[115\]](#) The familys inquiries about his whereabouts were unsuccessful, the ECRF statement said. It added that, according to Zakis mother, the death certificate stated that Zakis cause of death was acute circulatory failure. The family told the ECRF that they saw his body and that it had what they believed were signs of abuse, including signs of wounds in the head, [and] broken upper teeth.[\[116\]](#)

The ECRF said that Alaa Ragab Owais was arrested on August 13, 2016, and that his family sent several inquiries to authorities about his whereabouts. The ECRF statement added that a survivor of forced disappearance, whom it did not name, told ECRF lawyers that he saw Owais in the Abbasiya National Security building in Cairo, where they had been held at the same time.[\[117\]](#)

A joint report by two Egyptian human rights organizations, the Egyptian Front for Human Rights and Belady Center for Rights and Freedoms, said that Case 724 of 2016 (also known as Military Case 64 of 2017), for which the Interior Ministry said Zaki, Owais, and Gamal were wanted, was marred by gross abuses, including failure to investigate serious allegations of torture and disappearance; 120 defendants said they had been disappeared.[\[118\]](#) Dozens of defendants families filed complaints with the governmental National Council for Human Rights in this case.[\[119\]](#)

The third person mentioned in the Interior Ministry statement about the alleged Assiut shootout was Abdelrahman Gamal, 23 at the time, from Matay town in Minya governorate.[\[120\]](#) A science student at Minya University, he stopped attending classes and moved to Cairo in late 2013 or early 2014 after he learned he was wanted by authorities for his activism with the Muslim Brotherhood, Tayseer, a relative of Gamal living outside Egypt, said.[\[121\]](#) In 2014, the authorities prosecuted Gamal in absentia, in addition to his father and several others, in a mass trial over charges of alleged violence, including membership in a terrorist organization and possession of explosives. A court sentenced him to life in prison, Tayseer said.[\[122\]](#) Gamals father said in a TV interview that his son was a peaceful activist.[\[123\]](#) But Tayseer said he believed that, in 2015, Gamal had joined the Hasm armed group. Both Gamals father and Tayseer said that security forces killed Gamal in custody, about four months after he was arrested, and during that time he was held incommunicado.[\[124\]](#)

According to Tayseer, Gamals friends, including a witness, informed his family that on August 25, 2016, he was arrested at an apartment in October 6 City, in Giza governorate. We talked the day before and he told me everything was all right, Tayseer said. He added that he had been in regular contact, almost daily, with Gamal over the Telegram messaging app.[\[125\]](#)

Tayseer said the witness told the family that he heard gunshots when uniformed police raided the apartment, and that several people, including Gamal, were apprehended alive.

We sent complaints and reports to the Prosecutor General, the minister of interior, the minister of justice and the president himself, Tayseer said, adding that the family received no response.[\[126\]](#) Two weeks after his arrest, a lawyer who had connections in the Interior Ministry told the family that Gamal had been sighted by other detainees. We were told that he was sent to the National Security building in Sheikh Zayed [adjacent to October 6 City].[\[127\]](#)

Hours after the Interior Ministry published its December 2016 statement claiming the shootout deaths, officials from the Interior Ministry in Assiut called Gamals family in Minya to inform them about his death and tell them they could collect his body from the morgue at Assiut University Hospital, Tayseer said. According to Tayseer, four people who were able to see Gamals body said they observed seven bullet wounds, two in the head and the rest in the chest and abdominal area. They further said that there appeared to be signs of abuse including burns to the upper half of Gamals body and shoulders.[\[128\]](#)

Human Rights Watch reviewed a copy of the burial permission, dated December 7, 2016, which said that Gamals death was under inspection by the forensic doctor.

A December 7, 2016 video published by Al Jazeera Egypts Facebook page showed what it said was Gamals body shrouded in a white sheet while his mother caressed his uncovered face in the back of a burial service car.[\[129\]](#)

Several months after Gamals death, police in Minya detained his 16-year-old brother several times for short periods, in what the family said was a form of intimidation.

On May 8, 2017, Egypts official Middle East News Agency (MENA) reported that Interior Ministry forces killed eight terrorists on the Safaga-Sohag highway in southern Egypt in a shootout.[\[130\]](#) The statement cited an unnamed senior security official and did not name any of the eight men. The statement claimed the usual story: the National Security Agency obtained intelligence about a terrorist hideout, and when security forces approached the site, they were fired on and fired back, killing all eight. The statement said that security forces seized an unidentified number of guns and ammunition.[\[131\]](#)

A few hours after the news agency statement, the Interior Ministry released an official statement on its Facebook page which was apparently about the same incident.[\[132\]](#) The statement said that eight terrorist elements of the Brotherhood were killed in a hideout near a desert road in southern Egypt, but did not specify the location.[\[133\]](#) The statement said security forces used IT technology in tracking the men and seized three 7.62 x 39 millimeter rifles, 118 bullets and shells of spent bullets. The statement mentioned the names of only three of the men killed: Helmy Saad Masry Mohareb, Mohamed Medhat al-Zanati Nasser, and Abdelrahman Rashad Mohamed al-Wakeel.[\[134\]](#)

Several news websites published the names of the other men, including Albawabh news site, which is close to Egypts intelligence agencies. Albawabh said that nine men were killed in the incident and published their names and photographs.[\[135\]](#) In addition to the three named in the official government statement, Albawabh included: Mohamed and Mahmoud Ali Hassan, brothers from al-Sharqia governorate, Bassam Adel Adam from al-Arish in North Sinai, Abdallah Ragab from al-Fayoum, Mohamed Abdel Salam from al-Behira, and Ibrahim Gamal al-Ghazali from al-Menofiya.[\[136\]](#)

The Interior Ministry statement claimed that intelligence indicated that the group was planning to travel to obtain military training arranged by the Muslim Brotherhood outside Egypt, in order to return and carry out violent attacks.[\[137\]](#) The statement claimed that Helmy Saad Masry Mohareb was assigned to lead the group and that he had earlier been sentenced to death in absentia in a case in Damnhour and was wanted in several additional cases involving violence.[\[138\]](#)

The statement said that Mohamed Nasser was wanted in two 2014 cases for belonging to the Muslim Brotherhood and vandalizing public property.[\[139\]](#) Al-Wakeel was wanted in State Security Case 370 of 2015, involving anti-government armed militancy in Qaliubiya governorate, the statement said.[\[140\]](#)

Several independent and opposition websites published accounts of the families contradicting the Interior Ministrys statement. Families and lawyers told the independent Arabic Post and Noon Post websites that the men were travelling to Sudan to flee government oppression of Brotherhood members and that they were not part of any armed groups.[\[141\]](#) The Muslim Brotherhood released an official statement condemning what it described as the assassination of eight innocent men.[\[142\]](#)

The Facebook page of Al Jazeera Egypt published a video showing a person it said was Abdelrahman al-Wakeels father speaking inside a mosque during his sons funeral.[\[143\]](#) The father, a lawyer, said that he had encouraged his son to leave Egypt as a court sentence was expected soon. I am saying the truth before God, the father said in the video.[\[144\]](#) The father said he had booked a train ticket to Aswan for his son on May 4, and that the family had been in contact with him until May 7.[\[145\]](#)

Mohamed Nasser, 23, one of the men the Interior Ministry named as killed in a shootout, was from Ebshady village, in the town of al-Shuhada, in al-Menofiya governorate in the Nile Delta.[\[146\]](#) He was studying commerce in the University of al-Menofiya. In August 2016, he stopped attending classes after security forces attempted to arrest him near his village, apparently because of his Muslim Brotherhood activities, Naem, a relative, said.[\[147\]](#)

In August 2016, according to Naem, Nasser was stopped in an agricultural area by two men in plain clothes whom he thought wanted to ask about something. Instead, they attacked him and tried to handcuff him. Nasser was able to kick them and run away and he went into hiding. Naem said that over the following months the family heard from other detained men that National Security officers were looking to kill Nasser for having kicked the officers and for having got away, which made their bosses punish them. They took it personally, Naem said.[\[148\]](#)

The family then began arranging for Nasser to leave Egypt. They obtained a visa for him but because of his mandatory military service he would not be able to obtain army permission to travel.[\[149\]](#) Instead Nasser intended to cross irregularly into Sudan, Naem said. In May 2017, Naem learned that Nasser had begun his journey over a route long used to smuggle goods and people, including wanted dissidents and political activists, between several countries in East and North Africa.[\[150\]](#)

Naem said he spoke with Nasser on the phone on May 5, 2016. He seemed afraid and anxious that the journey was not going smoothly and that some fellow travelers dropped out because other travelers didnt look okay. Naem said he encouraged Nasser to wait and check with the person who arranged the trip. On May 6, Naem called again but another traveler who he says may have been Ibrahim al-Ghazali picked the phone. That man said that they were resting in a farm area. Just an hour or two later, Naem tried to call again, many times, but the phone had been switched off. On May 7, Naem called a friend who earlier had left Egypt by the same route and had links to the smugglers, asking him to seek news. The friend called him back a few hours later and said that the group had been arrested on that day, May 7, and might be presented to prosecutors in Hurgghada soon.[\[151\]](#) I immediately called Nassers father and told him to file a complaint to inquire about his whereabouts, Naem said.

Nassers family learned about the deaths of the eight men the next day when the Interior Ministry released its statement.[\[152\]](#) According to Naem, the family received a phone call from someone who said that the bodies might be in a hospital in Hurgghada. On their way there, the family received another call telling them the bodies were at Gizas Zeinhom morgue, but staff there told them they had received no bodies and that some forensic doctors had been called to go to Sohag to carry out some work there, Naem said.[\[153\]](#)

On May 10, the family traveled to Sohag. There, authorities required them to give DNA samples for matching and told that they would be contacted in five days to collect the bodies, Naem said. The family stayed in the same hotel where al-Ghazalis family was also staying, waiting to collect his body. The next day, a National Security officer called them and asked them to stop gathering in front of the hospital, where the bodies were.

Nassers family was able to collect his body on May 13 and buried him in al-Menofiya around 11 p.m. that day, Naem said. Al-Ghazalis family received his body a day later, according to a relative of his.[\[154\]](#)

Naem said that, according to other relatives who saw Nassers body, it bore what he believed were signs of burn wounds on his knees and wounds from electric shocks on his wrists. Fingers on both his hands appeared to have been fingerprinted and the body had three bullet wounds, he said. No forensic reports were provided to the family, Naem said.[\[155\]](#)

Human Rights Watch and the independent forensic experts it consulted reviewed seven photographs showing Nassers body in the morgue and a 20-second video showing his back. The photographs and video show several gunshot wounds in the right and left sides of the chest and back. The fingers on his left hand appear to have been fingerprinted. Bones appeared to project from his left hand just above the wrist. His chest had a longitudinal autopsy stitched scar.

Ibrahim Gamal al-Ghazali, one of the eight men killed in the incident, was not named in the official Interior Ministry statement. Al-Ghazali, 22, was a childrens gymnastics teacher, also from al-Shouhada town in al-Menofiya governorate.[\[156\]](#) Yasser, a relative of al-Ghazali, said al-Ghazali was a close friend of Nasser.[\[157\]](#)

Al-Ghazalis family had been aware of his plans to cross from Egypt to Sudan and that he was going to travel in May 2017 with a group that included his friend, Nasser.[\[158\]](#)

Al-Ghazali had been arrested once for a month in 2014 and charged in Case 1561 of 2014 of Downtown Cairo with participating in an anti-government protest on the anniversary of the January 25 uprising.[\[159\]](#) He was released on bail. A court later sentenced him to 10 years in absentia in a flawed mass trial of 227 people, most arbitrarily arrested, in Case 1564, known as Mazaleem Wast al-Balad.[\[160\]](#)

According to Yasser, al-Ghazali had earlier plans to travel abroad but his two visa applications to Turkey were rejected. Yasser said that on May 3, 2017, al-Ghazali started his journey to the border with Sudan in the same group with Nasser.

Yasser said that he learned on the evening of May 7 about al-Ghazalis arrest near Halayib city on the Sudan border when someone involved in arranging the trip and in regular contact with the smugglers called him. Yasser said that Ghazalis family immediately contacted a lawyer to attend his interrogation once Ghazali appeared before prosecutors. But that never happened. Less than 24 hours after I knew about al-Ghazalis arrest the Interior Ministrys statement about the killings came out, Yasser said.[\[161\]](#)

Authorities did not inform the family that al-Ghazali had been killed, but since the Interior Ministry statement mentioned Nasser, they were quite sure that their son was among the eight killed.[\[162\]](#) Yasser added that al-Ghazalis father, not knowing what to do, traveled to Hurghada, on Egypts Red Sea coast, as he had been told that people arrested in similar situations were presented to prosecutors there. Half-way to Hurghada, he changed course to Giza when he was told his sons body might be in the Zeinhom morgue, but it was not there. On May 10, the family received information from a family acquaintance in the Health Ministry that al-Ghazalis body was in the Akhmim Central Hospital morgue in Sohag.[\[163\]](#)

According to Yasser, the Akhmim Central hospital staff told al-Ghazalis father that he needed security authorization to collect the body. On May 10 he went to the National Security Agency building in the city, where an officer interrogated him about how he knew that his son was among the eight killed even though the Interior Ministrys statement did not mention his name. After the interrogation, the authorities took a blood sample from the father to conduct a DNA test and told him he would be contacted within the next three to five days.[\[164\]](#)

On May 14, the family received a phone call informing them that they could collect al-Ghazalis body from the morgue. After collecting his body, security forces escorted the family on an eight-hour road trip from Sohag to al-Ghazalis hometown in al-Menofiya.

The family saw what they believed were signs of beatings and abuse on al-Ghazalis body, Yasser said, including what appeared to be cigarette burns on his chest and abdominal area.[\[165\]](#) Human Rights Watch and the independent experts it consulted reviewed three photographs that the human rights platform We Record was able to obtain of al-Ghazalis body. One shows his lower face and his left shoulder, another shows his right arm and the third shows his left arm.[\[166\]](#) The photograph of the right arm showed an apparent high velocity gunshot exit wound on the back (posterior) side. The photograph of the shoulder showed suspected entrance and exit gunshot wounds. The third photograph showed a large circular laceration in the front (anterior) side of the left arm where skin was missing and muscles and bones were visible.[\[167\]](#) We Record said they had other photographs that showed two bullet wounds in his lower back and another in his chest around 20 centimeters below his right shoulder.[\[168\]](#)

The death certificate reviewed by Human Rights Watch, dated May 9, 2017, stated unnatural cause of death: bullet wounds, lacerated internal organs, broken bones, and bleeding. No autopsy report was delivered to the family.

Yasser said that authorities did not return to the family any of the belongings that al-Ghazali had with him on the journey, including his mobile phone, passport, and cash.

Interior Ministry forces killed three men Sabry Sabah Khalil, Abdel Zaher Yasin Mutawea, and Ahmed Mohamed Abu Rashed in Alexandria on June 20, 2017, and one, Mohamed Abdel Moniem Zaki Abu Tabeekh, in October 6 City, in Giza, on June 23, 2017, in two separate incidents of alleged shootouts. The Interior Ministry said all four were involved with Hasm.[\[169\]](#)

Just a few days earlier, on June 18, Hasm had claimed responsibility for a roadside bomb attack that killed one police officer and wounded another as well as three soldiers in Cairos Maadi district.[\[170\]](#)

Human Rights Watch interviewed relatives of the four men. Evidence strongly suggests police, between four and five weeks earlier, had arrested the four, who were apparently connected by business or friendship and supportive of the Muslim Brotherhood, and held them incommunicado before they were extrajudicially executed.

Families of all four said they made dozens of complaints inquiring about their relatives whereabouts without any response from the authorities. Human Rights Watch reviewed copies of the telegrams sent except for those sent in the case of Mutawea. Relatives of Mutawea saw him being arrested, while relatives of Rashed said a witness informed them about his arrest. Families of the three men killed in Alexandria said that the mens bodies bore what they believed were torture marks. Authorities gave them no autopsy reports despite the fact that bodies had undergone autopsies. The three families also received no death certificates and had to bury their relatives under strict security surveillance.

Sabry Khalil was 46 years old when the Ministry of Interior announced his killing on June 20, 2017.[\[171\]](#) A father of five daughters, the youngest 11, Khalil, who worked as an accountant and ran a real estate business, was from al-Dalgamoun village in Kafr el-Zayat, al-Gharbiya governorate, in the Nile Delta.[\[172\]](#)

Two of Khalils relatives, Soha and Nihal, interviewed separately, said that Khalil had been wanted since 2014 on charges of joining the Muslim Brotherhood.[\[173\]](#) In 2015, a military court sentenced him to 10 years in absentia in a mass trial along with 79 other defendants on charges of vandalizing public property and possession of explosives.[\[174\]](#) Out of fear of arrest, and because his home in Kafr el-Zayat had been raided more than once, Khalil rented two apartments, one in October 6 City, west of Cairo, and another in Alexandria.[\[175\]](#) His work required him to travel frequently between the two cities, the relatives said.[\[176\]](#) One daughter visited him frequently in the October 6 City apartment, most recently on May 16, 2017.[\[177\]](#)

Soha and Nihal said until then their phone communication with Khalil had been regular. They knew that he was traveling to Alexandria but two days after the visit they felt he sounded "different" on the phone. Soha said that he was texting too succinctly. Nihal said that on May 18 Khalil sent a voice note on a messaging app.[\[178\]](#) We had agreed on a security question and answer to know if he got arrested, she said. He sent a voice note to me, and I was 100-percent sure that he was arrested.

Around that time, Soha and Nihal said, a close friend of Khalil, Mohamed Abu Tabeekh, was worried because he, too, was unsuccessfully trying to contact him. Abu Tabeekh was from Khalils hometown of al-Dalgamoun and lived on the same street in October 6 City.[\[179\]](#) Soha said that Khalil asked Abu Tabeekh to meet, and he agreed. Then both Khalil and Abu Tabeekh went missing and were not reachable by phone.[\[180\]](#)

Khalils family concluded that he had been arrested around May 18, as on that day or the next security forces in black uniform and balaclavas raided Khalils apartment in Giza, Soha said. Khalils family lived in Kafr al-Zayat, but a neighbor of Khalil in Gizas October 6 City informed them about the raid. The neighbor told Soha that security agents went directly to the fourth floor, where Khalils apartment was, and destroyed the apartment. According to Soha, security agents arrested another man living in the same building and kept him for two weeks in the National Security Agencys building in Sheikh Zayed, adjacent to October 6 City, before releasing him. According to Khalils relatives, before going to Khalils apartment security forces raided Abu Tabeekhs apartment in a different building on the same street.[\[181\]](#)

On May 20 and 21, Khalil's family said, they sent several telegrams and complaints to the authorities, including the interior minister, the Prosecutor General, the security directorates in Giza and al-Gharbiya, and the police station closest to the raided apartment, inquiring about his whereabouts, copies of which Human Rights Watch reviewed. The family received no responses and for the next 33 days they had no information about Khalil's and Abu Tabeekhs whereabouts. On June 20, they said they learned about Khalils death from the media.[\[182\]](#)

On June 20, 2017, the Interior Ministry issued a statement claiming that security forces killed Khalil and two other men in an exchange of fire in Alexandria. The statement claimed that when security approached the building where the men were, the men opened fire and security forces dealt with the source of fire.[\[183\]](#) The statement claimed that security agents seized two automatic rifles, a 9 millimeter pistol and an unspecified amount of ammunition. The statement said that the shootout occurred in a deserted building in the Salt Company housing project in Alexandrias Borg al-Arab area.[\[184\]](#)

The statement falsely stated that Khalil had received a life sentence in a criminal case in Alexandria.[\[185\]](#) It also said that he, and the two others killed, were sought in State Security case 420 of 2017.[\[186\]](#)

The two other persons killed in the incident were Abdel Zaher Yasin Mutawea and Ahmed Mohamed Abu Rashed, the statement said. Mutawea, 32, a pharmacist, was a friend of Khalil and helped him rent the apartment in Alexandria, Nihal said.[\[187\]](#) Abu Rashed, 41, worked at the government tax authority and was from Khalil's hometown.

Abu Tabeekh, Khalil's friend who went missing with him, was announced killed in a separate Interior Ministry statement on June 23, 2017.[\[188\]](#)

Authorities did not contact Khalils family, but family members said that through lawyers they were able to learn that Khalils body was in the Koum al-Dikka morgue in Alexandria. When they arrived there, morgue employees told the family that there were three unidentified bodies. The family presented the Interior Ministrys statement about the incident, which included passport-like pictures of the deceased, but the morgue officials said that the family could not collect Khalil's body without Interior Ministry authorization. When the family tried to obtain authorization from Alexandrias Borg al-Arab police station, officers told them that they had no information about the incident and that no report had been filed about the deaths, Nihal said.[\[189\]](#)

The officers at the police station told the family to inquire at the office of the Supreme State Security Prosecution in Cairo. There, they were told that they would have to wait for a phone call to inform them when they could collect the body, Nihal said. Soha said that authorities requested two relatives of each of the deceased men to submit DNA samples to prove their relationship to the deceased.[\[190\]](#) After five days of negotiations and traveling back and forth, on June 25, which that year was Eid al-Fitr, the day Muslims celebrate the end of Ramadan, Khalils family received a call from the Borg al-Arab police station informing them they could come to collect his body.[\[191\]](#)

They received no autopsy report or death certificate, as international law requires.[\[192\]](#) The burial permission, a copy of which Human Rights Watch reviewed, mentioned that the cause of death was pending investigation. When the family saw Khalils body, he was "too thin, in an obvious way," Nihal said. "He had bruises on his body and three bullet wounds to his chest and around his heart." Nihal also said the body had a longitudinal chest scar, indicating he had undergone an autopsy.[\[193\]](#)

Security forces in several police cars escorted the hearse and accompanied the family from the morgue in Alexandria to where Khalil was buried in his hometown in Kafr al-Zayat, about 100 kilometers south of Alexandria. Nihal said that police arrested several people following the funeral for chanting against the government but released them shortly afterwards.

The family received several visits by National Security Agency officers after Khalil was killed, Nihal said.[\[194\]](#)

The Interior Ministry announced the death of a 32-year-old pharmacist, Abdel Zaher Yasin Mutawea, in the same June 20 incident.[\[195\]](#) Mohsen, a relative of Mutawea, said that security agencies had been pursuing him for Brotherhood ties since the military took over the government in July 2013.[\[196\]](#) He was later sentenced to prison in absentia for allegedly vandalizing public property and so constantly moved places to avoid arrest.[\[197\]](#) Mutaweas wife, in their hometown in Damnnhour city, north of Cairo, told Mohsen that she was with Mutawea in an apartment in Alexandria where he was living when security forces came to arrest him in mid-May 2017. The family sent faxes and telegrams to the Office of the Prosecutor General and the Interior Ministry inquiring about his whereabouts but received no response.

Khalils family said they believed that security officers tortured Khalil to force him to divulge the whereabouts of Mutaweas apartment in Alexandria.[\[198\]](#)

The family learned about Mutaweas killing from news media on June 20. When they began inquiring about the location of the body, they faced obstacles and security harassment similar to what Khalils family said they had faced. Prosecutors in Alexandria refused to authorize them to collect Mutaweas body and told them to go to the office of the Supreme State Security Prosecution in the Fifth Settlement neighborhood in eastern Cairo, which also refused to authorize them. Five days later, around June 25, the family received a call informing them they could collect the body from the Koum al-Dikka morgue in Alexandria.[\[199\]](#)

Mohsen said that they saw the body, which had what he believed were marks of abuse, including bruises and wounds to Mutaweas face and head.

Mohsen added that authorities did not deliver any autopsy reports or a death certificate to the family, although a characteristic longitudinal stitched scar on his body indicated it had undergone forensic dissection.[\[200\]](#)

The only document handed to the family was the burial permission, which stated that the cause of death was pending investigation.

The Interior Ministry statement mentioned that Mutawea was wanted in two cases of vandalizing public properties.

Ahmed Abu Rashed, 40, was an employee at the Tax Authority. Zainab, a relative, said that he was not living with his family in Alexandria but visited them frequently.^[201] He had three children, the youngest seven years old. Zainab said that Abu Rashed also ran a business as a real estate broker in order to boost his income. Abu Rashed knew Sabry Khalil, as they were from the same village of al-Dalgamoun. In recent years they were business partners but not close friends, Zainab said.^[202]

Zainab said the family had been in regular contact with Abu Rashed and that he also regularly called his mother until May 28, 2017, when, for the next three days, his phone rang without answer before it was switched off. Zainab said she asked his friends about his whereabouts but in vain. On June 4, Zainab inquired by telegram about Abu Rashed's whereabouts to the Office of the Prosecutor General, the Interior Ministry, and several other entities.^[203] No one responded. Human Rights Watch reviewed copies of the telegrams sent.

Zainab said that a man who did not identify himself called her one day in early June to say that he saw Abu Rashed being arrested in Alexandria. Zainab called that phone number several times later, but no one responded. She gave this information, including the phone number, to prosecutors who, to her knowledge, took no action.^[204]

Zainab said that in early April, a few weeks before Abu Rashed went missing, security officers questioned his colleagues at the Tax Authority. A few days earlier, Zainab said, security forces raided an apartment building where he was the broker in Sidi Bishr, a district of Alexandria; they searched an empty apartment looking for him. Zainab said Abu Rashed expressed concern and decided to go hiding but continued to meet his family regularly.^[205]

The Interior Ministry statement announcing his death did not specify any charges against Abu Rashed but said that he was involved with the Hasm armed group.^[206]

The site of the alleged shootout identified in the Interior Ministry statement was one of many deserted residential buildings near the saline lakes in western Alexandria, part of a failed government-sponsored housing project from the 1990s.^[207]

When Zainab went to collect Abu Rashed's body, she said, she saw Abu Rashed's face despite a National Security officers attempt to prevent her. His teeth appeared dislocated and his mouth was full of blood. He had a big bruise on his cheek, she said.

Another relative who attended the burial ritual of washing the body told Zainab that Abu Rashed had a bullet wound in the chest and that there were flesh wounds near his left elbow and on his left leg, she said.^[208]

Zainab said Abu Rashed had stitched scars on his chest and head indicating an autopsy had been performed but authorities gave the family no autopsy report or death certificate. Human Rights Watch reviewed a copy of the burial permission, which stated that the cause of death was under investigation. Security forces escorted the family from Koum al-Dikka morgue to his hometown burial in al-Dalgamoun, some 100 kilometers from Alexandria.^[209] It was an environment of intimidation, Zainab said. The security had [our] drivers phone number and he had to call them as a check-in every while. He was terrified.

Zainab said that the National Security officers made the family sign documents that they would directly bury Abu Rashed without any funeral or invitees and did not allow anyone to photograph the body.

Mohamed Abu Tabeekh, 39, also from al-Dalgamoun village, in al-Gharbiya governorate, was an English teacher and worked in translation. He had three children, the youngest 10 years old, when he was killed in June 2017.^[210]

Basma, a relative of Abu Tabeekh, said that he had not been wanted in any cases. She said that he had renewed his national ID card in March 2017, and he would not have been able to do so if he was wanted by law enforcement. He moved from al-Dalgamoun to Giza after his brother was killed in an anti-government protest on January 25, 2014.^[211]

Basma said Abu Tabeekh was a very close friend to Sabry Khalil. They were also neighbors in October 6 City. For two days, between May 18 and 20, Khalil was not returning Abu Tabeekh's calls, she said. Khalil answered the phone once, but his words worried Abu Tabeekh, Basma said. When Abu Tabeekh headed to the mosque nearby for al-Fajr (dawn) prayers on May 20, he told his family that he was going to check on Khalil afterwards, as Khalil lived on the same street. After he left for the prayers, Abu Tabeekh himself went missing and stopped answering his phone.^[212]

Basma said the family felt scared and decided to leave the apartment at dawn the next day. When his wife returned alone around noon, she found the apartment in disarray and the front door broken. Neighbors told the family that security forces had raided the apartment and asked about Abu Tabeekh's wife. Two days later, neighbors told the family, security forces came and searched the apartment one more time.^[213]

Basma said the family sent telegrams and faxes to eight government bodies including the National Council for Human Rights, the Interior Ministry and the Office of the Prosecutor General inquiring about the Abu Tabeekh's whereabouts. Human Rights Watch reviewed copies of the telegrams sent.

The authorities did not respond and the family knew nothing about Abu Tabeekh until, Basma said, an Interior Ministry statement announced his death on June 23, more than a month after he had gone missing.^[214] Basma said that his wife was in a hospital with a relative when she saw the news on a TV screen.

Basma said that the family went back to the apartment about two weeks after the June 23 statement. Everything was messed with, she said. Even the rubbish bag was emptied on the floor.

The Interior Ministry's statement, as usual, did not provide much information and parts of it were incoherent. It did not mention the date of the alleged shootout and claimed that the National Security Agency had information that members of Hasm were going to hold an organizational meeting on the highway to the oases of the Western Desert, which passes through October 6 city.^[215] The statement said security forces were monitoring the area. When they approached two parked cars men inside began firing; security forces returned fire, killing the driver of one of the cars, Abu Tabeekh, while the others escaped.^[216]

The statement claimed that Abu Tabeekh's body was found next to a silver Opel Astra which he was driving and that after searching the site of the incident security agents found an automatic rifle, ammunition, bullet casings, and Abu Tabeekh's national ID card.^[217]

The statement did not indicate how many people were allegedly in the cars at the time of the shootout or any details about the car that allegedly escaped. The statement said Abu Tabeekh was from al-Dalgamoun and residing in an apartment in October 6 City but did not explain why there had been no attempt to arrest him there if security knew where he was living. The statement claimed that Abu Tabeekh was a leader of Hasm and responsible for its central financial support. It also said he was sought by authorities in Case 420 of 2017.^[218]

Basma said that the car description and plate number mentioned in the statement matched the car that the family owned.

Basma said the family went to the October 6 police station after seeing the news on TV. An officer confirmed that police had received a report of a man killed by gunfire a day before. The family collected the body from the Zeinhom Morgue in Giza on the same day, June 24. Human Rights Watch viewed a copy of a death report, signed by a forensic doctor, which stated that the cause of death was bullet wounds in the chest that led to bleeding. A relative who saw the body told Abu Tabeekh's wife that there was nothing remarkable apart from the gunshot wounds, she added. The family received a death certificate two weeks after the killing.^[219]

On July 15, 2017, the Interior Ministry issued a statement saying that security forces that morning had killed four terrorists in a desert area near Gilbana village, in al-Qantara Sharq, in Ismailia governorate, about 180 kilometers northeast of Cairo.^[220] The statement named Suhail Ahmed al-Mahy and Zakaria Mahmoud Nada, and said the two others were still being identified, which is also a pro-forma clause occasionally used in ministry statements on alleged shootouts. Nearly five years after the incident, the ministry has released no further information, which is also the case for other statements in which some of the alleged armed militants killed were not identified.

The incident took place one day after unknown gunmen killed five police officers and soldiers in Cairo.^[221] No group immediately claimed responsibility.

The statement claimed the usual: intelligence led security forces to the site which terrorists used as a hideout to hide and prepare for a series of terrorist attacks. When security forces were abruptly fired at while approaching them, they dealt with them, which resulted in killing four terrorists.^[222] The statement, which did not include pictures, said that security forces confiscated sums of cash, an automatic 7.62 x 39 millimeter rifle and a Brown[ing] 9 millimeter pistol, ammunition, casings from fired bullets and pamphlets with extremist ideas.^[223]

The statement also mentioned a separate incident in Giza on the same day in which security forces killed two men in another alleged shootout.

The statement did not include any charges, accusations, or case numbers for al-Mahy and Nada. Their family offered a coherent narrative about their probable arrest a week before the statement, asserting that the two men in custody when they were killed. Forensic analysis of photographs taken of their bodies showed significantly different stages of decomposition, indicating that the putrefied body had been kept in an external environment without refrigeration, or possibly that the two men were not killed at the same time which contradicts the Interior Ministry's narrative. The authorities offered no explanation. One source told the families that the two men were probably killed four days before the Interior Ministry's announcement.

Suhail al-Mahy and Zakaria Mahmoud Nada are first cousins, born in 1997 and 1996 in al-Sawahel village in the Nile Delta governorate of Damietta.^[224]

N., a source close the families of both men, said that although they come from a family known for its support of the Muslim Brotherhood, al-Mahy and Nada were not involved with the Brotherhood or any other political organization.^[225] N. said that neither had criminal records or been arrested before.^[226] They even didn't have Facebook accounts to follow news or comment on political affairs, they said.^[227] Al-Mahy was a mere high school student, they said. Nada had dropped out of school and was working as a carpenter in one of the city's furniture shops, for which Damietta is famous.^[228]

According to N., on July 9, 2017, al-Mahy and Nada left New Damietta, where they lived, with two friends, via public microbus to visit Cairo and Alexandria. N. said they were not sure if all four were in the same vehicle. In a phone call that evening, al-Mahy told his family that they were then approaching a regular police checkpoint near Ismailia governorate, on the Suez Canal.^[229] His family never heard from him again, nor did Nadas.^[230]

About six months earlier, al-Mahy had been injured in a car accident and underwent surgery to insert plates in his right thigh. He walked with a crutch, they said.^[231] He wanted a change of scenery, so he decided to travel, they said. Al-Mahy had also been in an earlier car accident in 2016 that led to injuries to his neck and face.

The road trip in July 2017 was only the third time he traveled outside Damietta, N. said.

N. said that their families looked for al-Mahy and Nada for several days. They said they asked their lawyer to send telegrams inquiring about their whereabouts to several government entities but never received a response.^[232] Their phones were working for days, but no one was picking up, they said.^[233]

A week later, the family of the two cousins learned about their killing from television news. The family called a contact in the Ismailia Public Hospital to check if they had received bodies from any shooting incidents, and learned that their bodies were in the hospital morgue. The following day the family traveled to Ismailia, but the morgue staff refused to give them any information and told them to obtain security authorization.^[234] The family visited the Ismailia Security Directorate and the al-Qantara Sharq police station, but officers denied knowledge of any shooting incidents. Eventually they visited the National Security Agency building in Ismailia. Officers there asked the family to leave their phone numbers and said that they would contact them with the information. They told us they will get us information on the condition that no funeral or memorial service would be held, N. said.^[235]

Four days following the Interior Ministry announcement, on July 19, al-Mahy's father received an officers phone call. They asked us to come to collect his body in the morning, and later come again to collect Zakarias at night, N. said.^[236]

When the family went to collect the body, they were terrified by what they saw. We barely recognized Suhail [al-Mahy], they said. They pointed at a bloated body with bad burns all over and a featureless face and said, This is Suhail.^[237] N. said they recognized Suhail's underwear, which they had shopped for him not long before his death.^[238]

When the family saw Nadas body, which was easily recognizable and in the adjacent storage box in the morgue, they felt more assured that the other body was al-Mahys, N. said.

The family saw signs that made them believe both men were abused before they died.

N. said that Nada had shoe marks on his face from what appeared to be stomping. His nose was broken, and there appeared to be marks of cigarettes put out on his body. He also had bullet wounds to his head and face.^[239] The condition of al-Mahys body was worse and indicated it may have been kept unrefrigerated, but authorities offered no explanation for this.

Human Rights Watch reviewed a copy of al-Mahys death certificate, which stated that the cause of death was a bullet from a rifle, an automatic rifle or a larger firearm.

Human Rights Watch and the independent experts consulted for this report reviewed a video of al-Mahys body showing most of his body except his feet and back. His body showed signs of advanced decomposition, indicating he had died at least 24 to 48 hours before the video was taken.^[240] He wore underwear boxers. There was apparently coagulated blood in and around the mouth. The skin on his right hand was peeling off.^[241] The video also showed a stitched longitudinal scar in al-Mahys chest indicating an autopsy had been performed but authorities gave no autopsy report to the family. It was not possible for Human Rights Watch to draw further conclusions about the wounds he sustained before death because of the bodys decomposition and apparent putrefication. There were what looked like larvae (insects) on his body.

Reuters news agency, in an investigative report on possible extralegal killings in Egypt, said that it had obtained photographs and a video of Nadas body and showed them to three forensic experts, including Professor Derrick Pounder, a pathologist who has consulted for Amnesty International and the United Nations.^[242] According to the experts analysis, Nadas body had three gunshot wounds to the head. One bullet entered beside his right nostril and exited just below his lower lip. That would place the shooter overlooking, above and to the right of the victim if the victim was standing, which would seem unlikely in an exchange of gunfire, Pounder told Reuters.^[243] A more likely scenario is that the victim was kneeling with the shooter standing close on the right side. Nadas other gunshot wounds were in his forehead, almost symmetrically placed just below the hairline to the left and right, which suggested final coup de grace shots, Reuters wrote, citing Pounder.^[244]

Human Rights Watch reviewed seven photographs showing the upper half of Nadas body and his head and face. Forensic expert Stefan Schmitt, whom Human Rights Watch consulted, agreed with this analysis. Nadas chest and neck had the longitudinal stitched scar indicating an autopsy had been performed but authorities provided no forensic reports to the family.

According to N., their source in al-Ismailia Public Hospital told them that al-Mahys body arrived at the hospital on the morning of July 11, four days before the Interior Ministry announced their killings.^[245] The morgue delivered al-Mahys body on July 19 to the family in a black plastic bag, they said. Police and morgue staff placed his body in an ambulance and refused to let any family member ride with them. They traveled to his hometown in Damietta, more than 140 kilometers from al-Ismailia, escorted the entire time by a police car. The police wanted to ensure that no funeral or service would be held for al-Mahy, N. said.^[246] We buried him without a coffin or rituals. Security officers did not allow his mother to see the body and harassed those who tried to attend the burial, N. added.

N. said that security allowed the family to bury Nada following similar restrictions.

In the morgue, they said, they met the families of the two other unnamed men killed in the same incident, but they did not speak.^[247] They said that that the body of one of the men was in a similar condition to al-Mahys. His family couldnt recognize him and asked for a DNA test to be conducted.^[248]

Less than a year after his killing, in May 2018, police arrested al-Mahys mother, Amal Abdel Fattah Ismail, and authorities prosecuted her in the State Security Prosecution Case 832 of 2016 on charges of joining what authorities said was the Islamic State (ISIS) of Upper Egypt.^[249] N. said security agents held her incommunicado for about two months. A terrorism court sentenced her in November 2018, following a mass trial of over 65 defendants, to 15 years in prison.^[250] Authorities also charged al-Mahys mother and one of al-Mahys four brothers, Mosab, in another State Security case, 818 of 2018. A court ordered Mosab released in 2020 but authorities instead added him to another case.^[251] Both Ismail and Mosab remain jailed at time of writing.

Security forces arrested one of al-Mahys three sisters, Mulaika, 24, in May 2020 and held her incommunicado for several weeks.^[252] Prosecutors added her to Case 818 of 2018. In January 2021, a court ordered Mulaikas conditional release, but she was not released until March 5, 2021.^[253]

N. said that said that Hanzala and Muthanna, al-Mahys two other brothers, were arrested in 2014 and 2016. Muthanna has been missing since then and Hanzala remained jailed at time of writing.^[254]

On July 23, 2017 the Ministry of Interior published a statement on Facebook saying that its forces killed eight members of the armed wing of the terrorist Brotherhood, naming the Hasm group.^[255] The statement said that security forces were shot at when they approached a militants hideout in a desert area near Sinnouris town, in al-Fayoum governorate, and returned fire, killing the eight. The statement claimed that this hideout was used to recruit and train new young members, and added that security forces seized four automatic rifles, a 9 millimeter pistol, ammunition, spent bullet casings, and two motorcycles.^[256] The statement was accompanied by four photographs showing a tent in a desert area, two motorcycles, and three improvised practice targets.^[257] The alleged shootout followed the suspicious retaliatory pattern as it occurred just two days after Hasm claimed an attack that killed and injured four police officers.^[258]

One of those named in the Interior Ministry statement was Omar Adel Abdelbaqy, a 19-year-old high school student who grew up in the small village of Salmant, Belbis town, in al-Sharqia governorate, less than 60 kilometers northeast of Cairo. He had two younger sisters and a younger brother, according to Tawfiq, a relative.^[259]

Tawfiq said that security forces first arrested Abdelbaqy in 2014, when he was 16, for participating in protests supporting the Muslim Brotherhood following the 2013 military takeover.^[260] According to Tawfiq, Abdelbaqy said he had been tortured before authorities released him eight months later without trial.^[261] Tawfiq said that both Abdelbaqy and his father had been wanted for their Brotherhood activities. Security forces visited their home routinely. To avoid arrest, Abdelbaqy had an apartment where he sometimes slept overnight.^[262]

Abdelbaqy was active and daring, Tawfiq added. One time an officer almost caught him in a protest, but he ran away. They kept chasing him for almost an hour.^[263]

According to Tawfiq, on July 13, 2017, Abdelbaqy went out in the afternoon to join a football training at the village club. He was training a group of young kids Tawfiq said. They liked him a lot because he was nice and patient with them.^[264]

The family worried when Abdelbaqy was not back by late night and not answering his phone, but they decided to wait until morning as they thought he could be in his other apartment. When he was still not reachable in the morning the family decided to track him. The find my device phone feature, Tawfiq said, showed that his last location was near the National Security building in Zagazig, the capital of al-Sharqia governorate. Thats when the family realized he had been arrested.^[265] One of the teenagers who was present in the club told Abdelbaqys family that a group of men took him and put him in an unmarked car waiting by the club and drove away immediately.^[266]

That day the family visited two police stations in Zagazig as well as the National Security building to inquire about Abdelbaqys whereabouts, but all denied any knowledge of his whereabouts or arrest. At the National Security building an officer said unpleasant things to his mother and told her not to come back, Tawfiq said. The family also inquired about him in another National Security building in nearby 10th of Ramadan City.^[267] Tawfiq said that the family sent telegrams to the Office of the Prosecutor General, the al-Sharqia Security Directorate, and other officials, but received no response.^[268]

On July 15, two days after Abdelbaqy went missing, the Albawabh website, which is close to security agencies, reported that security authorities arrested Abdelbaqy.^[269] The article, accompanied by his photo, said that al-Sharqia police, in coordination with National Security Agency officers, arrested a young man belonging to the terrorist Muslim Brotherhood organization in Salmant village in Belbis town. His name is Omar Adel Abdelbaqy. The article said that he was sentenced to ten years in prison following a military trial for joining unauthorized protests and inciting and participating in violence. The article added that The suspect is being interrogated The general prosecution is handling the investigation.^[270] The article named two journalists in its byline but did not mention sources.^[271]

Tawfiq said that Abdelbaqys family felt relieved when they saw the Albawabh article as it confirmed he was in custody.^[272] But eleven days later the Ministry of Interior published the statement announcing Abdelbaqy was killed.^[273] The statement did not mention any specific cases, charges, or previous attacks that Abdelbaqy or the seven others killed were allegedly involved in.^[274]

Tawfiq said that just hours after the Interior Ministry released its statement, National Security forces arrived at Abdelbaqys family home in Salmant village and surrounded it for about ten days. His parents stayed elsewhere for fear of being arrested.^[275]

Tawfiq said that a man phoned Abdelbaqys father, Adel, on July 24, a day after the ministry announcement and introduced himself as an officer with National Security in 10th of Ramadan City.^[276] According to Tawfiq, the officer offered condolences, and said, It was not us who killed him. The officer also told the father to calm down, otherwise he would be hurt.^[277]

On July 24, the family traveled to Zeinhom morgue in Cairo, where they believed Abdelbaqys body was. Tawfiq said that a morgue employee told them there were two unidentified bodies in the morgue and allowed the family to check. Abdelbaqy was one of them, Tawfiq, who saw the body, said. But the morgue employees did not allow the family to collect the body because for the morgue the dead mans identity was still unknown.^[278]

Tawfiq, who said he had served in the Egyptian military in the Gulf war during the 1990s, said that he saw on Abdelbaqys body what he believed were two 6mm bullet wounds in his chest that appeared to have been fired at close range. Tawfiq said that he saw no signs indicating abuse.^[279]

For the next several days, Tawfiq said, relatives visited the morgue but were not allowed to collect the body until August 3, after one of his uncles underwent a DNA test to prove his relation to him. National Security officers only allowed them to take the body after midnight to avoid potential protests at the funeral and warned the family against any chants against the government during the burial, Tawfiq said. They took Abdelbaqys body to Salmant, where they held a funeral and buried him.^[280]

The day after the funeral, a police officer arrived at Abdelbaqys family home and asked all visitors who came to offer condolences to leave. The father then left Egypt, as he feared he would be arrested and killed like Omar, Tawfiq said.^[281]

In the early morning of December 29, 2018, a Ministry of Interior press statement said that its forces killed 40 terrorists that day in two separate alleged shootouts in Giza involving 30 men and a third incident in North Sinai involving 10 men.^[282] Human Rights Watch analyzed the statement and accompanying photographs and was able to interview a relative of two of the men killed in Giza.^[283] The evidence clearly indicates that some of the 30 men killed there were not killed in shootouts and were probably extrajudicially executed.

The ministry statement did not name or mention any details about the 40 men killed, even their alleged affiliation with any groups. It claimed the raids and killings were simultaneous and part of the ministries preemptive efforts to prevent terrorist attacks planned against state institutions and Christian places of worship.^[284] It was one of the largest numbers of alleged armed militants announced killed in one day. The statement did not mention any arrests and said that security forces seized large numbers of guns, ammunition, and explosives but provided no details.^[285]

The statement claimed that security forces, based on intelligence, dealt with the terrorist hideouts, resulting in the deaths of 14 men near the Abu al-Wafa buildings in October 6 City, 16 men near the Abna al-Giza buildings (apartment complex) near October 6 City, and 10 men in the Ibni Baytak buildings in al-Arish, the capital in North Sinai.^[286]

The statement was sent to the media with dozens of photographs showing dead bodies, all with obscured faces, and pools of blood and guns next to many of them. It was widely covered in Egyptian and international media.

The statement came less than 24 hours after a roadside bomb in Giza had killed three Vietnamese tourists and an Egyptian tour guide. The sequence fits the pattern of what appear to be retaliatory killings following attacks by armed groups and involving executions of persons already in custody.^[287]

The three sites identified in the statement as terrorist hideouts are government-sponsored housing projects. The Abna al-Giza apartment complex comprises uninhabited residential buildings, and the buildings in al-Arish were only partially occupied.^[288] By contrast, the Abu al-Wafa buildings are in a lively area in October 6 City, where a gun battle between security forces and 14 armed men would normally attract the attention of the bystanders and neighbors and have a significant number of witnesses. But as in all other incidents documented in this report, there is no record that the prosecution summoned any potential witnesses or made any meaningful efforts to investigate the killings.

Human Rights Watch researchers and the independent experts consulted for this report reviewed 35 photographs of these incidents published on the websites of the government newspaper al-Ahram as well as the pro-government al-Youm al-Sabea newspaper, and Mobtada and Masrawy websites.^[289] The different photographs show the bodies of at least 40 men and 28 guns. The photographs had been altered, as indicated by the blurring of faces. Analysis of the photographs found additional evidence of the lack of credibility of the governments narrative.

At least five photographs show that the bodies had been moved before being photographed, as indicated by the position of body relative to the pools of blood or marks of dragging. At least three photographs show spent bullet casings.^[290] The low position of suspected projectile impacts on the walls and the apparent blood stains and splatter on the walls behind the bodies in 10 photographs, suggest that nine men were shot from above. Many appear to have been shot in the head, as indicated by the pools of blood proximate to the position of the bodies and heads.

At least three photographs show three different bodies with their hands behind their backs in a position strongly indicating they were originally restrained or handcuffed in that position prior to their deaths before these restraints were apparently removed. One of the three appears in a red sweater, blue jeans and partially visible white underwear, the fingers of his left hand clutching his right hand behind his back, and a cartridge casing visible on the ground behind his back. He is photographed lying on his right side in a room with a concrete floor partially covered by a large pool of blood. Another photo shows the same man with his left arm in front of him, and a firearm that was not in the other photograph appears next to him, his left hand holding its stock, indicating the photograph was probably staged to make it appear that the man was holding the firearm.

According to Professor Schmitt, in general, in a raid, even after killing or wounding an armed suspect, one would assume that the authorities would separate the combatants from the weapons as a priority, as they need to confirm that they indeed are dead. Under this assumption, it certainly is unusual to find many photographs of bodies either holding the weapons, or having them close-by. Prof. Schmitt added in email exchanges with Human Rights Watch that finding the weapons in such positions is not something that necessarily happens when someone is killed.

The families of cousins Ahmed Yousri, 31, and Ibrahim Ghadeer, 24, arrested in late 2016, recognized their bodies in the published photographs, according to Ashraf, a relative of both men, and a lawyer.^[291] Authorities never informed them of the two mens fate and had not allowed them to receive the bodies up until time of writing. The families believe authorities buried them in an unknown location. According to the families and their lawyer, a court had ordered Yousri and Ghadeer released in November 2018, but the authorities never complied.^[292]

Ashraf said that security forces arrested both men in November 2016, along with three other members of their extended family. Several members of their families witnessed the raids and arrests at two buildings where they lived in Cairos Ain Shams neighborhood and in Gizas October 6 City, Ashraf said. Authorities held them incommunicado for a few weeks before presenting them to prosecutors in Cairo. The other three family members were released separately, without trial, in the following months. Prosecutors charged Yousri and Ghadeer in Case 831 of 2016, known as Ajnad Masr IV (Soldiers of Egypt IV), in which authorities accused an unspecified number of suspects of joining the Ajnad Masr armed group and involvement in violence.^[293]

Ashraf, who now lives outside Egypt, said that Yousri, an accountant, was arrested about two weeks after his wedding. His wife was pregnant and gave birth while he was in detention.^[294]

In December 2016, authorities transferred Yousri to Cairos notorious Scorpion Prison where many of those perceived as high national security threats are jailed.^[295] Scorpion Prison authorities routinely ban visits by families and lawyers for months or years at a time.^[296] Yousri was only able to receive verbal messages or, rarely, letters from his family smuggled to him during court hearings when he saw Ghadeer, who unlike Yousri was allowed visits in Istiqbal Tora prison.^[297]

Ghadeer, a computer programmer, received several family visits. Ashraf recalled briefly seeing Ghadeer in prison in late 2018 when he was visiting another imprisoned relative. He was okay, but he had back problems that could be treated inside prison.^[298] Ashraf added that Ghadeer told him that Yousri looked terrible when he saw him in a court hearing.

Ashraf recalled that Ghadeer talked about his dreams to travel abroad when released. On November 6, 2018, a court conditionally released Yousri and Ghadeer as they approached the two-year limit for pretrial detention in Egyptian law.^[299]

Following the release order, Ashraf said, authorities transferred both men to Ain Shams police station, where they received family visits, clothes, and food. After a few days, authorities transferred them to al-Salam police station. The families were not able to see them there but they had what turned out to be their last phone call, through a smuggled phone, with their family.^[300] On November 17, 2018, their lawyer wrote on his Facebook page that they were awaiting National Security officers approval to be released.^[301] But for more than a month after the phone call from the al-Salam police station, neither the family nor the lawyer were able to contact them. On December 21, the lawyer wrote that a court was going to review Yousris and Ghadeers release conditions on December 22 despite that they were still forcibly disappeared.^[302]

An officer at al-Salam station told their family that they had been sent to the National Security Agencies headquarters in the Abbasiya neighborhood around the last week of December, Ashraf said. He added that another family member detained at Tora prison told the family that he met with new prisoners transferred from the Abbasiya National Security detention who said they had seen Yousri and Ghadeer there. This was two weeks before the Interior Ministry announced the killings, Ashraf said.^[303]

According to Ashraf, Ghadeers family identified him in the photographs published with the ministry statement, as he was a tall man and had a white back brace, which he was wearing for his back problem. Yousri was wearing the same clothes that he received in Ain Shams police station more than a month earlier, Ashraf said.^[304]

Ashraf said that the family contacted a doctor who was able to visit the Zeinohm morgue unofficially. The doctor confirmed that he saw Yousris and Ghadeers bodies among those delivered to the morgue on December 29, the day the alleged shootout was announced. As of writing, the family has not been able to collect their bodies. On January 3, 2019, about five days after the killing, the lawyer wrote on his Facebook page, Im in the morgue now. They are refusing to allow anyone [to collect the bodies]. They took [our] names. The number [of bodies] is likely over 40.^[305]

The Association of Families of the Disappeared, a Facebook group, wrote in the evening of December 29, 2018, that the family of anyone disappeared should go to morgues in the cities where the alleged shootouts took place to check if their disappeared relatives were among those killed.^[306] The group said that there were 62 bodies from alleged shootouts that December.^[307]

Ashraf said that the family had another relative whom Interior Ministry security forces killed in 2015 in an earlier alleged shootout.

On September 18, 2019, the Ministry of Interior issued a six-line statement claiming security forces had killed nine elements of the terrorist Brotherhood in two hideouts in Cairos 15th of May City and al-Obour city, in Qalubia governorate, northeast of Cairo.^[308] The statement named only Mahmoud Gharib, and claimed he was a leader of the Liwa al-Thawra (Revolution Brigade) armed group.^[309]

Mahmoud Gharib, 24, was a university student from al-Shouhda town, al-Menofiya governorate. His family said he had been arrested about six months earlier and held incommunicado prior to his killing.^[310]

Gharib, an active Muslim Brotherhood member, had joined the group during the January 2011 uprising, when he was 15. That is when Hossam met him for the first time. Gharib and Hossam became close friends in the summer of 2013 when they both joined the weeks-long pro-Morsy Raba sit-in in Cairo. Hossam said he lived with Gharib for more than a year leading up to his arrest in early 2019.^[311]

Authorities had arrested Gharib and detained him for three months in 2014 on charges of participating in unauthorized protests. He was only an 18-year-old who just finished high school, Hossam said. Authorities released him without trial, and he began studying agriculture at Cairos al-Azhar University. Hossam said that authorities arrested two of Gharibs brothers in 2018 and 2019 and interrogated them about his whereabouts. Gharib then stopped attending university classes in Cairo and moved to Alexandria, Hossam said.^[312]

Hossam said that in January 2018 Gharib contacted him asking for help finding a place to stay in Alexandria. I was the link between Gharib and his family, Hossam explained. Gharibs father was also sought by authorities for Brotherhood links. For the next several months, Gharib moved between several apartments in Alexandria, all rented by Hossam.^[313] In June 2018, authorities added Gharib to Egypts terrorism list.^[314]

Following Gharibs arrest in 2019 authorities charged him and one of his elder brothers, who had been arrested in 2018, in Case 64 of 2017, in which the military prosecution had prosecuted over 300 defendants for alleged involvement with Hasam armed and the failed attempt to assassinate Assistant Prosecutor General Zakria Abdel Aziz in September 2016.^[315] Six months after the Interior Ministry announced his death, a military court sentenced Gharib in absentia in March 2020 to life in prison.^[316] The court acquitted his brother but authorities have kept him detained in another case.^[317]

Hossam said he witnessed Gharibs arrest. On March 17, 2019, he said, he was going to meet Gharib in a caf in al-Saa square, one of Alexandrias busy areas. Around 5:30 p.m., Hossam said, when he was just dozens of meters away from the caf, he saw several men in plainclothes approach Gharib. They arrested him while shouting security at a gathering group of people.^[318] Hossam said he saw seven or eight men attack Gharib, hitting him on the head with their guns while pushing him into an unmarked microbus after tying him with the sleeves of jacket he was wearing.^[319] This was the last time anyone saw him, Hossam said.

The following day, on March 18, security forces raided Gharibs apartment, and two other apartments associated with Hossam, who went into hiding before leaving Egypt later that year.^[320]

A few days later, Gharibs family sent telegrams to the Ministry of Interior and the head of the Alexandria Security Directorate stating that he was apprehended on March 17 in al-Saa square and inquiring about his whereabouts and expressing concern over his well-being. Human Rights Watch reviewed copies of these telegrams, dated March 23, 2019 and April 11, 2019. The family never received a response.^[321]

Hossam said that Gharibs detained brother smuggled a letter to his family a few weeks after Gharib went missing saying that other inmates had met him in a detention center and that he was fine.^[322]

During the months between Gharibs arrest and his death, another of his brothers was arrested for two days during which he was blindfolded in a secret detention center and not asked about anything Hossam said. The family believes that the brother was arrested as a way to pressure Gharib to confess.^[323]

The brief September 2019 Interior Ministry statement accused Gharib of involvement in the killing of Lieutenant General Adel Ragaei in October 2016 in al-Obour, an attack that the group Liwa al-Thawra had claimed at the time.^[324]

The statement announcing Gharibs death, which included no photographs, claimed that security forces seized six automatic weapons, two birdshot guns, chemicals, electrical circuits and an improvised explosive device.^[325]

According to Hossam, when the family went to Gizas Zeinohm morgue to collect Gharibs body right after the announcement of the killings, staff there told them they had not received it. For the following 50 days, the family was not able to collect the body. Eventually, on November 12, 2019, the family received a call from the mayor of their village (al-Shouhda) to collect the body on condition that they do not make a fuss about it, a family member told We Record. Gharib was buried in the presence of security forces in his hometown without a funeral. No family member was able to see the body uncovered.^[326]

Extrajudicial killings and summary executions are serious violations of international human rights law and can amount to crimes against humanity when carried out in a systematic or widespread fashion as state policy. This is the case particularly when extrajudicial killings are compounded by other grave abuses such as forced disappearance and torture. Failure to provide information about the fate of those executed make their families victims to those crimes as well.

The right to life is an inherent, core, and non-derogable human right, regardless of the circumstances and even in times of armed conflict or states of emergency. Summary, extrajudicial, or arbitrary executions are clearly prohibited under international law.

Such protections derive from fundamental regional and international treaties to which Egypt is a state party, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights (ACHPR), the Arab Charter on Human Rights, and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT).^[327]

Article 6 of the ICCPR states, Every human being has the inherent right to life. This right shall be protected by law. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life.^[328] In its interpretation of Article 6, the UN Human Rights Committee said that everyone is entitled to the protection of the right to life without distinction or discrimination of any kind including for persons suspected or convicted of even the most serious crimes.^[329] Article 6 further states that in countries where death penalty is not yet abolished, it can only be carried out pursuant to a final judgement rendered by a competent court, and only for the most serious crimes.^[330]

The ACHPR states that Every human being shall be entitled to respect for his life and the integrity of his person. No one may be arbitrarily deprived of this right.^[331]

The UN Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal, Arbitrary, and Summary Executions affirm that extra-legal, arbitrary, and summary executions cannot be carried out under any circumstances. According to the principles, governments shall prohibit orders from superior officers or public authorities authorizing or inciting other persons to carry out any such extralegal, arbitrary or summary executions. All persons shall have the right and the duty to defy such orders.[\[332\]](#)

In the incidents documented in this report, Egyptian authorities failed to present information documenting evidence of actual gun battles that might require using lethal force. All available information suggests the contrary. But even in actual exchanges of fire which may have taken place, there are clear restrictions and obligations to minimize casualties and deaths. Even if some of the alleged shootouts were real, in these cases the Egyptian security forces apparently violated these norms, as indicated by the very few suspects who survived such incidents and the very low numbers of reported casualties among security forces. In all 143 incidents of alleged shootouts Human Rights Watch reviewed, only one militant, out of 756, was arrested after being wounded. In only four incidents, around six alleged militants escaped. In a stark comparison, a total of 47 members of the security forces were wounded (in only seven incidents) and five were killed (in only three incidents).

According to the UN Human Rights Committee, the body of experts that reviews state compliance with the ICCPR, international law requires that the use of lethal force, such as firearms, is an extreme measure that should only be considered when strictly necessary in order to protect life or prevent serious injury from an imminent threat. It cannot, for example, be lawfully used to merely prevent the escape of a suspect or convict if that person does not pose such an imminent threat during their escape.[\[333\]](#)

Governments should legislate effective safeguards to prevent arbitrary deprivation of life, including establishing by law adequate institutions and procedures for preventing deprivation of life, investigating and prosecuting potential cases of unlawful deprivation of life, meting out punishment and providing full reparation.[\[334\]](#) Egyptian laws regulating law enforcement forces offer no detailed regulations. On the contrary, they provide security forces with wide discretion in using lethal force.[\[335\]](#)

The UN Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials detail regulations governing the use of lethal force and state that governments should keep them constantly under review with a view to limiting the use of lethal force.[\[336\]](#) Use of firearms should always be a measure of last resort, and governments should provide security forces means as broad as possible including various types of weapons and ammunition that would allow for a differentiated use of force and firearms and non-lethal incapacitating weapons for use in appropriate situations.[\[337\]](#) When the use of firearms is unavoidable, officers should only use them with a view to minimize damage and injury, and respect and preserve human life.[\[338\]](#) Officers should also ensure that medical aid is provided to any wounded individuals as soon as possible.[\[339\]](#)

In none of the incidents documented in this report did the Interior Ministry say it ordered ambulance service, and in none of these incidents did any of the suspects survive whether injured or unharmed.

The UN Principles require officers to give a clear warning of their intent to use firearms, unless to do so would unduly place the law enforcement officials at risk () or would be clearly inappropriate or pointless in the circumstances of the incident.[\[340\]](#)

The UN Principles are clear that political events, turmoil, political instability, or a public emergency may not be invoked to justify any departure from these basic principles.[\[341\]](#)

The incidents documented in this report demonstrate utter disregard of Egyptian security forces to such principles. In addition, Human Rights Watch and other organizations have documented Interior Ministry forces killing and wounding thousands of citizens in disproportionate, unnecessary use of lethal force against largely peaceful protesters.[\[342\]](#) Very few officers were ever investigated and fewer found guilty in a final court verdict.[\[343\]](#) Some of these mass killings likely amounted to crimes against humanity[\[344\]](#)

Such a record of gross abuses in broad daylight, with near-total impunity, effectively confers a green light for abusive officers to carry out extra-judicial executions of secretly held detainees.

Under international law, state authorities have a clear responsibility to carry out transparent, independent criminal investigations of any law enforcement personnel involved in the suspected unlawful use of lethal force or extrajudicial killings. Neither in the 14 cases detailed in this report, nor in any other alleged shootout incidents reviewed by Human Rights Watch, does it appear that a single officer has been summoned for investigation. Human Rights Watch is not aware of any instance in which the Interior Ministry has carried out any internal investigation or imposed any disciplinary measures in relation to these incidents.

Because of the grave consequences of using lethal force, even before opening an investigation international law obliges law enforcement authorities to report in a timely fashion details of incidents in which officers using firearms killed or wounded others. Such reporting includes ensuring that relatives or close friends of the injured or affected person are notified at the earliest possible moment.[\[345\]](#)

In this report, only one of 14 families of the individuals killed said that the Interior Ministry officially notified them within a day of the incident. In almost all the cases, families had to proactively seek information, sometimes for weeks or months, with no cooperation from authorities, and in two cases were in the end unable to retrieve the bodies of their loved ones.

In all cases involving use of firearms by law enforcement officials, persons affected (in case of death, families of the deceased) shall have access to an independent process, including a judicial process[\[346\]](#) For incidents detailed in this report, no family was able to review meaningful reports and the authorities offered little or no access to documents, information or independent judicial or administrative investigation or redress mechanisms.

International law holds responsible superiors who knew or should have known about the unlawful use of lethal force by their subordinates, and they too should be investigated in such incidents. Subordinates are obliged to defy orders to unlawfully kill or wound individuals and cannot avoid prosecution by invoking the fact that they were following orders.[\[347\]](#)

The UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights released in 2016 an updated Manual on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, widely known as the Minnesota Protocol, first adopted in 1991.[\[348\]](#) The guidelines also apply in situations of internal disturbances and tensions.[\[349\]](#)

The manual offers detailed clinical and judicial guidelines and principles that governments should apply in investigating any potentially unlawful deaths.[\[350\]](#) This includes either actions or lack of action by the authorities that violate the duty to respect the right to life, such as all deaths possibly caused by law enforcement personnel. It also includes the death of a person detained or in custody, regardless of the place of that custody.[\[351\]](#)

Governments should work on incorporating the guidelines of the Minnesota Protocol in their laws and practices. Statements typically released by the Interior Ministry or public prosecution about the killings documented in this report, and broadly all similar incidents, do not even begin to meet the most basic elements of the protocols guidelines, even in the most superficial sense.

According to the Protocols guidelines, authorities duty to investigate is not only triggered where there is a clear case of unlawful death, but also where there are reasonable allegations of a potentially unlawful death. The duty to investigate is applicable even if authorities do not receive a formal complaint.[\[352\]](#) For persons in state custody, as the majority of cases documented in this report appear to have been, the Protocol states:

Among the basic principles is that family members of the victims should have the right to seek and obtain information on the causes of a killing and to learn the truth about the circumstances, events and causes that led to it.[\[354\]](#) The Protocol further states that the right to know the truth extends to society as a whole:

This means that close relatives should be able to participate effectively in the investigation and be informed regularly of its progress during all phases.[\[356\]](#) Family members should also have the right to have a representative present during an autopsy.

Needless to say, family members should be protected from harassment or intimidation, which was a problem faced by at least 11 families out of 14 whose relatives deaths are documented in this report.

In order to meet international standards, investigations should be:

The Minnesota Protocol offers a detailed look at the investigation process, providing scientific, medical, criminological, and legal guidelines on ante-mortem analysis, autopsy, crime scene preservation and analysis, and how to keep structured records of all evidence. The impartiality of the forensic doctors, thorough examination of the crime scene to retrieve all evidence, including biological or chemical evidence, and the expertise of impartial firearms experts are all fundamental elements required to establish a living chronology of events that surrounded and preceded the killings.[\[358\]](#)

Photographs the Interior Ministry sometimes released of alleged crime scenes in the incidents documented in this and previous reports frequently indicate that the bodies of those killed had been moved before being photographed and that the most elemental scientific and criminology principles in preserving a crime scene were not met. For instance, the Interior Ministry released a video statement about its operations against terrorists in July 2018, which apparently showed a security man in plain clothes retrieving guns with his bare hands, unprotected by gloves, from what the video alleged to be an underground terrorist hideout.[\[359\]](#)

Human Rights Watch found no evidence that the prosecutor general ordered independent experts to visit the crime scene in any of the incidents in this report, or to examine confiscated weapons or other evidence.

Of relevance to the killings documented in this report is the obligation of the authorities to identify, summon, and interview all possible witnesses. This should include door-to-door visits and inquiries in the area surrounding the site of the killings and any other physical location of importance to the investigation.[\[360\]](#) In many of the cases documented here, authorities gave no precise locations of the killings, and apparently did not take the simplest steps of identifying and interviewing possible witnesses. That was the case even in four alleged shootouts in this report that happened in multistory residential buildings where numerous witnesses could potentially provide valuable information. On the contrary, security forces routinely harassed, intimidated, and arrested journalists who tried to visit houses in the vicinity of incidents related to security forces abuses.[\[361\]](#)

Also relevant is the collection of mobile phone data, whether from devices found at the alleged shootout scene or from the service providers. Such data can provide evidence, whether exculpatory or inculpatory, of the locations of the victims in the days or hours before the killings and the people they have been in touch with.[\[362\]](#) In no incident documented in this report did authorities provide information about such data to the families or to the public. In the vast majority of cases of enforced disappearance that Human Rights Watch has documented in Egypt, in this report or previously, prosecutors did not authorize the families of the disappeared to obtain such data from telecom companies.[\[363\]](#)

The Protocol, in general, derives from international law instruments such as the UN Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary (1985), the UN Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers (1990), and the UN Guidelines on the Role of Prosecutors (1990).

In light of these principles, it is quite impossible to envision a meaningful, transparent, independent investigation into the killings documented in this report without radical systemic changes in Egypt[\[364\]](#) The Egyptian judiciary lacks independence and, in recent years, has been heavily politicized.[\[365\]](#) Forensic doctors and pathologists are poorly-trained, ill-funded, and are employees of the Justice Ministry which lacks independence.[\[366\]](#)

Almost all persons who were killed in incidents in this report had apparently been subjected to days, weeks, or months of enforced disappearance before the government announced their deaths. Enforced disappearance, a serious violation of international human rights law, is defined as the arrest or abduction of an individual by state authorities or their agents followed by a refusal to acknowledge the deprivation of liberty or by concealing the fate or whereabouts of the person.[\[367\]](#)

Human Rights Watch and other organizations, including the UN human rights special mechanisms have reported thousands of incidents of enforced disappearance by Egyptian security forces under President al-Sisis government.[\[368\]](#) People forcibly disappeared are outside the protection of law, and are especially vulnerable to severe torture and inhuman treatment. Enforced disappearances may constitute crimes against humanity when so widespread as to suggest it is state policy, as is the case in Egypt.[\[369\]](#)

Even though Egypt has not ratified the UN Convention against Enforced Disappearance, all governments are required to uphold the rule of law when it comes to keeping people in custody, including by following the standards set out in the 1992 UN General Assembly's Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearances.[\[370\]](#)

Authorities have an obligation in cases of enforced disappearance to provide information to the victims relatives. The right of victims families to know the truth in cases of disappearances is guaranteed by international law. The African Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Fair Trial and Legal Assistance states that anyone arrested or detained should be brought before a judge and charged with a specific crime, and be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or release. Any person deprived of liberty should be held in an officially recognized place of detention.[\[371\]](#)

Two families out of the 14 cases in this report said they were never informed about the fate of their relatives, and had not been permitted to receive their bodies at time of writing almost three years after they were killed in December 2018. Another family was only allowed to receive the body of their deceased relative after two months. The UN Human Rights Committee has held that a states failure to pursue cases or provide information about the fate of a disappeared person to families can inflict extreme anguish upon relatives of the disappeared, which make them victims of the violation as well. For the families, not knowing what happened to a relative is a source of ongoing suffering, and may even amount to torture, according to the UN Working Group on Enforced Disappearance.[\[372\]](#)

Eight families out of 11 in this report who were able to see the uncovered bodies of their killed relatives said that their deceased relatives bore signs of beatings, burns, broken bones or teeth, or other signs of abuse that had occurred shortly before the killings took place. International treaties that Egypt is party to prohibit torture and cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment, without exception or derogation.^[373] Article 10 of the ICCPR mandates that "[a]ll persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person."^[374]

Key articles of the Egyptian constitution prohibit extrajudicial executions, including article 55 which states, All those who are apprehended, detained or have their freedom restricted shall be treated in a way that preserves their dignity. They may not be tortured, terrorized, or coerced.^[375] Articles 51 and 59 require the government to ensure, guarantee and protect the human dignity and physical safety of all individuals.^[376]

Enforced disappearances and arbitrary arrests further violate article 54, which states, All those whose freedoms have been restricted shall be immediately informed of the causes therefore, notified of their rights in writing, be allowed to immediately contact their family and lawyer, and be brought before the investigating authority within twenty-four hours of their freedoms having been restricted.^[377]

Egyptian laws do not explicitly define enforced disappearance and are insufficient in defining, criminalizing, and punishing torture.^[378]

Egyptian security forces have been operating almost uninterrupted for four decades, since 1981, under nationwide states of emergency which grant them unchecked powers.^[379] Law 94 of 2015 for Confronting Terrorism erodes basic rights and protections.^[380] It gives security personnel full discretion, without judicial oversight, to use force, and immunizes them from any criminal investigation in cases in which they used lethal force.^[381] According to article 8:

According to articles 63 and 232 of Egypt's Code of Criminal Procedure, the public prosecution has the exclusive prerogative to investigate allegations against public officials and law enforcement personnel. Only the Prosecutor General, an Attorney General, or a Chief Prosecutor can file a court case against an official, meaning that a lower-ranking prosecutor, below the rank of Chief Prosecutor, cannot do that.^[383]

Another layer of impunity is provided in the Instructions of the Public Prosecution, issued by the prosecutor general to prosecutorial staff nationwide, which lays out how prosecutors are supposed to conduct investigations against police officers. These instructions state that junior members of the prosecution can only proceed with their investigations after obtaining permissions from their superiors, such as the chief prosecutor of a local district.^[384] Moreover, the prosecution has to inform the accused officers supervisors before any interrogation, raising the possibility that officers will proceed to intimidate victims or witnesses.^[385] Only the prosecutor generals office can make the final decision to refer a case against a public official or law enforcement officer to trial, and he can decide instead to send the case for internal ministry discipline.^[386]

The Interior Ministry statements about alleged shootouts reviewed for this report almost always mention that the investigations into those incidents were handed to the Supreme State Security Prosecution (SSSP), a branch of public prosecution that oversees political, terrorism, and state security cases. The statements sometimes mentioned that the SSSP authorized the raid. However, the public prosecution released no statements about the nine incidents documented in this report, and almost never publicly commented on the dozens of the announced alleged shootout incidents since 2015. Human Rights Watch found no record that the prosecution has opened an independent, transparent investigation into any of these incidents.

Human Rights Watch and other organizations research over the past decade has provided a detailed look into the appalling systematic failure of Egypt's general prosecution to investigate security forces abuses, including enforced disappearance, torture and protesters killings.^[387] Egypt's judiciary, in general, lacks independence and, under President al-Sisi government, has been under relentless attacks by the executive authority, and many new laws introduced to further undermine its independence.^[388] Dozens of judges who voiced the slightest criticism or gesture of independence have been disciplined or fired.^[389]

One major problem is the conduct of the SSSP. For decades, this prosecution branch has acted largely as a rubber stamp for security allegations, including arbitrary arrests and extended pretrial detention of peaceful activists and dissidents.^[390] In utter disregard to the right to defense, and to provide a further cover for abuses, the SSSP premises are routinely inaccessible to lawyers.^[391] Members of the SSSP almost always deny lawyers the right to obtain or read the prosecution files or official charges, or see evidence against their clients.^[392]

Moreover, the systematic intimidation of witnesses, tampering of evidence by police and Interior Ministry officers, as documented in several previous reports, constitute an even greater problem because the prosecution in fact largely relies on the police and Interior Ministry to investigate and collect evidence.^[393] For example, the Instructions of the Public Prosecution states that a member of the police force delivers confiscated evidence to the forensic authority.^[394]

One former prosecutor speaking with Human Rights Watch in 2011 summarized the structural problem:

The culpability of the SSSP is also evident when it sends cases to courts, as their investigations are almost entirely based on the unsubstantiated, sometimes incoherent, allegations of the National Security Agency officers who are the same officers involved in abducting, disappearing and torturing activists, which emphasizes the SSSPs role as a cover for security forces abuses.^[396]

Egypt's Forensic Medical Authority has been chronically underfunded.^[397] Several officials have complained in recent years that only less than 100 forensic doctors work for the authority in unfavorable conditions, including lack of sufficient compensation and inadequate equipment.^[398]

Instead of acknowledging these structural problems, Egypt's Prosecutor-General Hamada al-Sawy said in November 2020 that arbitrary arrests and enforced disappearance do not happen in Egypt, which undermines any official efforts by members of the prosecution to investigate such crimes.^[399]

These are some of the factors that make an independent investigation into probable extrajudicial executions nearly impossible without radical, structural reforms that address the systematic problems undermining Egypt's justice system. But as a first step the Office of the Prosecutor General should remove the SSSP from overseeing any cases related to security forces abuses.

Almost all statements by the Interior Ministry about the alleged shootouts mentioned that the ministry's National Security Agency (NSA) was involved, particularly in gathering information and identifying the individuals to be targeted. Human Rights Watch and other groups have repeatedly documented the responsibility of the NSA for grave abuses including widespread, systematic arbitrary arrests, enforced disappearances and torture. The NSA has dozens of offices and multiple headquarters in Cairo and all of Egypt's governorates. They all serve as illegal detention sites, usually heavily surrounded by security and fortifications, and are inaccessible to members of the public. The location of some of those buildings are well-known to dissidents and activists but others remain secret. Members of the public prosecution never visit these locations to carry out the slightest examination as required by Egyptian law which mandates them to inspect all detention sites.

Acting as Egypt's main domestic intelligence apparatus for decades, the NSA works with unchecked powers, largely outside the law. Its director, who holds the title of Assistant Interior Minister, is appointed by and reports directly to the minister.^[400] The NSA director is usually chosen from among the senior NSA officers who spent years or decades working in the agency. The level of knowledge that senior officers knew or should have known about abuses being committed by the agency, and whether they failed to take steps to prevent or prosecute the crimes, should be considered by those concluding independent investigations or sanctions, as well as responsibility for ongoing abuses, including by countries that provide Egypt with security assistance.

The agency's directors since 2015, the period covered by this report and who should be investigated for their potential role in abuses, are as follows:

The Interior Ministry statements about the alleged shootouts do not typically mention which departments or divisions with the security forces carry out those raids. Human Rights Watch examined several videos published by the Interior Ministry on its YouTube page showing alleged raids and shootouts and examined the emblems on the uniforms of the officers involved.^[402] There are several divisions involved but two that are clearly featured in those videos are: the Special Operations Unit and the Central Security Forces; each has its own commander who reports to the interior minister. Human Rights Watch called for investigating General Medhat Meshawhy, the former Special Operations Unit commander, for his role in supervising the 2013 Raba massacre.^[403]

Human Rights Watch could not find records indicating whether members of the the Supreme State Security Prosecution (SSSP) actually accompany the security forces during the apparent extrajudicial executions, but the Interior Ministry statements about alleged shootouts typically mention that the SSSP was handling investigations into the killings. Members of the SSSP play a crucial role in maintaining the environment of impunity for NSA officers, as they almost always failed to investigate allegations of serious crimes such as enforced disappearance and torture.^[404] Senior Attorney General Khaled Daa al-Din has reportedly headed the SSSP since 2016 and reports to Prosecutor General Hamada al-Sawy.^[405]

Many Egyptian researchers, lawyers, and activists assisted with this report by connecting Human Rights Watch to victims families. They cannot be named to protect their safety, but their brave work has been invaluable.

Amr Magdi, a Human Rights Watch Middle East and North Africa researcher, wrote this report, with the help of a senior research assistant who prepared initial drafts of two sections. Both researchers conducted interviews for this report.

Joe Stork, deputy director of the Middle East and North Africa division, edited this report. Clive Baldwin, senior legal advisor, provided legal vetting, Letta Tayler, associate director in the Crisis and Conflict Division, reviewed the report for terrorism and counterterrorism-related content. Tom Porteous, deputy program director, provided final program review.

Travis Carr, photo and publications coordinator at Human Rights Watch, helped prepare the report for publication. A senior associate in the Middle East and North Africa division provided production assistance.

[1] Human Rights Watch, Egypt: Hostage-Taking And Intimidation By Security Forces, January 1995, <https://www.hrw.org/reports/1995/Egypt.htm>; Amnesty International, Egypt: Grave Human Rights Abuses Amid Political Violence, May 25, 1993, <https://www.amnesty.org/en/documents/mde12/003/1993/en/> (accessed May 27, 2021).

[2] See, for example: Mohamed Salah, Leader of al-Gamaa al-Islamiya killed with three others from the Groups armed wing, al-Hayat, September 8, 1998, copied in Sauress <https://www.sauress.com/alhayat/31019480> (accessed February 15, 2021); Mokhtar Awad and Mostafa Hashem, Carnegie Middle East Center, Egypt's Escalating Islamist Insurgency, October 2015, https://carnegieendowment.org/files/CMEC_58_Egypt_Awad_Hashem_final.pdf (accessed June 11, 2012).

[3] Egypt: Grave Human Rights Abuses, Amnesty International, Ibid.

[4] Human Rights Watch, Hostage-Taking and Intimidation By Security Forces, Ibid. Section, March 1994: SSI Officer Intimidates Family of Victim of Security Forces Raid.

[5] Egypt's Contemporary Pharaohs, BBC Arabic, video clip, February 9, 2016, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=t3XXF9TikDs&t=1544s> (accessed July 22, 2021).

[6] Ibid.

[7] It is telling that General Allam was appointed in 2017 as a member of the National Council for Combating Terrorism and Extremism.

[8] Egypt: Documented Death Toll from Protests Tops 300, Human Rights Watch news release, February 8, 2011, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2011/02/08/egypt-documented-death-toll-protests-tops-300>.

[9] Younsri al-Badry and Ibrahim Qura, Acquittal for All Interior Ministry Officers in Protesters Killings, Almasry al-Youm January 24, 2017, <https://www.almasryalyoum.com/news/details/1077890> (accessed May 7, 2021).

[10] Amnesty International, Egypt: Brutality Unpunished and Unchecked: Egypt's Military Kill and Torture Protesters With Impunity, October 2, 2012, <https://www.amnesty.org/en/documents/MDE12/017/2012/en/> (accessed May 7, 2021).

[11] Human Rights Watch, All According to Plan: The Raba Massacre and Mass Killings of Protesters in Egypt, August 12, 2014, <https://www.hrw.org/report/2014/08/12/all-according-plan/raba-massacre-and-mass-killings-protesters-egypt>.

[12] Ibid.

[13] Patrick Kingsley, Abdel Fatah al-Sisi won 96.1% of vote in Egypt presidential election, say officials, The Guardian, June 3, 2014, <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2014/jun/03/abdel-fatah-al-sisi-presidential-election-vote-egypt> (accessed June 15, 2021).

- [14] Human Rights Watch, World Report 2015, (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2015), Egypt chapter, <https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2015/country-chapters/egypt>.
- [15] Ibid.
- [16] Human Rights Watch, World Report 2016, (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2016), Egypt chapter, <https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2016/country-chapters/egypt>.
- [17] Human Rights Watch, World Report 2017, (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2017), Egypt chapter, <https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2016/country-chapters/egypt>; Human Rights Watch, World Report 2018, (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2018), Egypt chapter, <https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2016/country-chapters/egypt>; and Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021, (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2021), Egypt chapter, <https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2021/country-chapters/egypt#295c25>
- [18] The Egyptian Commission for Rights and Freedoms, Continuous violation and absent justice, forced disappearance, a five-year report, September 2020, <https://www.ec-rf.net/3509/> (accessed May 7, 2021).
- [19] Human Rights Watch, We Do Unreasonable Things Here Torture and National Security in al-Sisi's Egypt, September 6, 2017, <https://www.hrw.org/report/2017/09/05/we-do-unreasonable-things-here/torture-and-national-security-al-sisis-egypt>.
- [20] Ibid.
- [21] Human Rights Watch interviews with a former victim of forced disappearance in Cairo in 2016 and 2021, via secure messaging app. After the initial secret detention lasting for about three weeks, the person was detained for several additional months without trial before being released.
- [22] Al-Sisi Leads the Funeral of Prosecutor General Hisham Barakat, the official YouTube channel of Egypt's Defense Ministry, video clip, June 30, 2015, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wJ2LD7n7nrk> (accessed February 9, 2021).
- [23] Egypt: Police Account of Deadly Raid in Question, Human Rights Watch news release, July 31, 2015, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/07/31/egypt-police-account-deadly-raid-question>.
- [24] See for example, A lethal attack revisited, Mada Masr, July 13, 2015, <https://www.madamasr.com/en/2015/07/13/feature/politics/a-lethal-attack-revisited/> (accessed October 27, 2020).
- [25] Egypt: Counterterrorism Law Erodes Basic Rights, Human Rights Watch news release, August, 19, 2015, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/08/19/egypt-counterterrorism-law-erodes-basic-rights>.
- [26] Mohamed al-Galy, Al-Sisi: the constitution was written in goodwill and countries are not built by goodwill, Youm7, September 13, 2015, <https://www.youm7.com/story/2015/9/13/%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B3%D9%8A%D8%B3%D9%89-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AF%D8%B3%D8%AA%D9%88%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%85%D8%B5%D8%B1%D9%89-%D9%83%D9%8F%D8%AA%D8%A8-%D8%A8%D9%86%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%8A%D8%A7-%D8%AD%D8%B3%D9%86%D8%A9-%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AF%D9%88%D9%84-%D9%84%D8%A7-%D8%AA%D8%A8%D9%86%D9%89-%D8%A8%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%86%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%8A%D8%A7/2346160> (accessed June 9, 2021).
- [27] Stephanie van den Berg, Edmund Blair, Lesley Wroughton, and other unnamed Reuters staff, Special Report: Egypt kills hundreds of suspected militants in disputed gun battles, April 5, 2019, Reuters, <https://www.reuters.com/article/us-egypt-killing-specialreport/special-report-egypt-kills-hundreds-of-suspected-militants-in-disputed-gun-battles-idUSKCN1RH10E> (accessed February 21, 2021).
- [28] See for example: Security announces three times the arrest and killings of suspects in the Prosecutor Generals assassination, al-Masry al-Youm, March 7, 2016, <https://www.almasryalyoum.com/news/details/905606> (accessed May 12, 2021).
- [29] International Commission of Jurists, Egypt's Judiciary: A Tool of Repression. Lack of Effective Guarantees of Independence and Accountability, October 12, 2016, <https://www.icj.org/egypt-authorities-must-end-politicization-of-the-judiciary-and-ensure-its-independence-and-accountability/> (accessed February 9, 2021); and Human Rights Watch, Work on Him Until He Confesses: Impunity for Torture in Egypt, January 31, 2011, <https://www.hrw.org/report/2011/01/30/work-him-until-he-confesses/impunity-torture-egypt>.
- [30] See below under Suspicious Killings and Probable Extra Judicial Executions.
- [31] See Non-State Actors, Tahrir Institute for Middle East Policy (TIMEP), <https://timep.org/non-state-actors/> (accessed February 12, 2021).
- [32] Human Rights Watch, If You Are Afraid for Your Lives, Leave Sinai! Egyptian Security Forces and ISIS-Affiliate Abuses in North Sinai, May 28, 2019, <https://www.hrw.org/report/2019/05/28/if-you-are-afraid-your-lives-leave-sinai/egyptian-security-forces-and-isis>.
- [33] These are mostly the dates when these groups first claimed attacks, but the groups were probably created earlier. See Revolutionary Punishment, TIMEP, <https://timep.org/esw/non-state-actors/revolutionary-punishment/>; and Liwaa al-Thawra, TIMEP, <https://timep.org/esw/non-state-actors/liwaa-al-thawra/>; and Hassam, TIMEP, all March 29, 2017, <https://timep.org/esw/non-state-actors/hasam-movement/> (all accessed February 12, 2021).
- [34] Mokhtar Awad and Mostafa Hashem, Egypt's Escalating Islamist Insurgency; Ibid.
- [35] For example, Mohamed al-Sawy, Who is Deshesha who was killed by the Interior Ministry and mourned by the terrorist group Hasm?, Masrawy, December 19, 2016, https://www.masrawy.com/news/news_cases/details/2016/12/19/1001892/%D9%85%D9%86-%D9%87%D9%88-%D8%AF%D8%B4%D9%8A%D8%B4%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B0%D9%8A-%D9%82%D8%AA%D9%84%D8%AA%D9%87-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AF%D8%A7%D8%AE%D9%84%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D9%88%D9%86%D8%B9%D8%AA%D9%87-%D8%A8%D8%B1%D9%83%D8%A9-%D8%AD%D8%B3%D9%85-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A5%D8%B1%D9%87%D8%A7%D8%A8%D9%8A%D8%A9- (accessed June 29, 2021).
- [36] Non-State Actors, Tahrir Institute for Middle East Policy, Ibid.
- [37] Mohamed Tawfiq, Hasm and Liwa al-Thawra, Discourse and Practice, the Egyptian Institute for Studies, September 11, 2017, <https://eipss-eg.org/%D8%AD%D8%B3%D9%85-%D9%88%D9%84%D9%88%D8%A7%D8%A1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AB%D9%88%D8%B1%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AE%D8%B7%D8%A7%D8%A8-%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%85%D9%85%D8%A7%D8%B1%D8%B3%D8%A9/> (accessed July 29, 2021).
- [38] Ibid, and, Mohamed Goma, The Ikhwan Jihadism. Pragmatic and Intellectual Aspects, al-Ahram Center for Political and Strategic Studies, May 2, 2018, <http://acpss.ahram.org.eg/News/16611.aspx> (accessed February 12, 2021).
- [39] Mohamed Tawfiq, Hasm and Liwa al-Thawra, Discourse and Practice, ibid, and Mohamed Hamama, The hidden world of militant special committees, Mada Masr, December 22, 2015, <https://www.madamasr.com/en/2015/12/22/feature/politics/the-hidden-world-of-militant-special-committees/> (accessed February 12, 2020).
- [40] Omar Said, No united front: Mixed messages from the Muslim Brotherhood on violence, Mada Masr, April 8, 2015, <https://www.madamasr.com/en/2015/04/08/feature/politics/no-united-front-mixed-messages-from-the-muslim-brotherhood-on-violence> (accessed June 9, 2021).
- [41] Secretary Tillerson Designates HASM & Liwa Al-Thawra as Specially Designated Global Terrorists, US Embassy in Egypt, 31 January, 2018, <https://eg.usembassy.gov/secretary-tillerson-designates-hasm-liwa-al-thawra-specially-designated-global-terrorists/> (accessed June 11, 2021).
- [42] Terrorist Designations of Ajand [sic] Misr and Ibrahim al-Rubaysh, US Department of State, December 18, 2014, <https://2009-2017.state.gov/r/pa/prs/ps/2014/12/235386.htm> (accessed June 11, 2021).
- [43] See, for example, the Interior Ministry Official Facebook Page, July 23, 2017, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/posts/1481876358522689> (accessed May 7, 2021).
- [44] Egypt: Terrorist Tag Politically Driven, Human Rights Watch news release, December 28, 2013, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2013/12/28/egypt-terrorist-tag-politically-driven>.
- [45] Egypt: Intensifying Crackdown Under Counterterrorism Guise, Human Rights Watch news release, July 15, 2018, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2018/07/15/egypt-intensifying-crackdown-under-counterterrorism-guise>.
- [46] Egypt uses terrorism trials to target human rights activists, say UN experts, UN Human Rights Council press release, October 8, 2020, <https://www.ohchr.org/FR/HRBodies/HRC/Pages/NewsDetail.aspx?NewsID=26364&LangID=F> (accessed June 9, 2021).
- [47] Jared Malsin and Amira El-Fekki, Egyptian Families Accuse Security Forces of Killing Detainees, Wall Street Journal, July 23, 2019, <https://www.wsj.com/articles/egyptian-families-accuse-security-forces-of-killing-detainees-11563874202> (accessed November 6, 2020).
- [48] US State Department Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, Country Reports on Human Rights Practices: Egypt, 2020. <https://www.state.gov/reports/2020-country-reports-on-human-rights-practices/egypt/>; 2019, <https://www.state.gov/reports/2019-country-reports-on-human-rights-practices/egypt/>; and 2018, <https://www.state.gov/reports/2018-country-reports-on-human-rights-practices/egypt/> (all accessed February 22, 2021).
- [49] Human Rights Watch, If You Are Afraid for Your Lives, Leave Sinai!, Ibid.
- [50] Egypt: Possible Extrajudicial Killings in Sinai, Human Rights Watch news release, March 16, 2016, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2017/03/16/egypt-possible-extrajudicial-killings-sinai>.
- [51] Egypt's Mufti Endorses Protesters Killings, Al Jazeera, October 8, 2013, <https://www.aljazeera.net/news/arabic/2013/10/9/%D9%85%D9%81%D8%AA%D9%8A-%D9%85%D8%B5%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B3%D8%A7%D8%B6-%D8%AF%D8%A7%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A5%D9%81%D8%AA%D8%A7%D8%A1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%85%D8%B5%D8%B1%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D8%B9%D9%84%D9%89-%D9%82%D8%AA%D9%84-%D8%B9%D9%86%D8%A7%D8%B5%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A5%D8%AE%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%86> (accessed July 22, 2021).
- [52] Ibid.
- [53] The full speech could be found on different YouTube channels and websites, including , video clip, October 10, 2013, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xxm8w-yVyH8> (accessed July 22, 2021).
- [54] Goma defended his statements in another public speech published on his official YouTube page, in which he claimed the Raba killings were justified because protesters were not peaceful, , March 4, 2015, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dNprN6ddA8Y> (accessed July 22, 2021).
- [55] Why Does Dar al-Ifta Endorse the Killings of the Brotherhood?, Arabi21 website, February 21, 2019, <https://arabi21.com/story/1161767/%D9%84%D9%85%D8%A7%D8%B0%D8%A7-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B1%D8%B6-%D8%AF%D8%A7%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A4%D9%8A%D8%A4%D8%AF-%D9%82%D8%AA%D9%84-%D8%B9%D9%84%D9%89-%D9%82%D8%AA%D9%84-%D8%B9%D9%86%D8%A7%D8%B5%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A5%D8%AE%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%86> (accessed July 22, 2021).
- [56] Ahmed al-Bahnasawi, The National Defense [Council] Mourns Board Guards Martyrs and Affirm: We Will Avenge, el-Watan Newspaper, July 20, 2014, <https://www.elwatannews.com/news/details/523797> (accessed February 12, 2021).

[57] President al-Sisis Speech in His Meeting with Leaders of the Armed Forces and the Police, February 2, 2015, The National Media Authority YouTube Channel, video clip, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=343Y1votl0Q> (accessed February 12, 2021).

[58] Patrick Kingsley and Manu Abd, At least 32 killed in Egypt as militants attack army and police targets in Sinai, The Guardian, January 30, 2015, <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2015/jan/29/egypt-army-police-sinai-el-arish-sheikh-zuwayed-rafah> (access February 12, 2021).

[59] See for example: The third revenge strike against the hideouts of terrorist rats, the Official Facebook page of the Armed Forces Spokesperson, video clip, July 4, 2015, <https://www.facebook.com/watch/?v=684282681702717> (accessed May 7, 2021).

[60] The Interior Ministry initially claimed al-Sayed had attempted to escape or that Muslim Brothers bribed the officer to kill him so that he did not divulge information. But prosecutors later referred the officer to trial after he confessed he had killed al-Sayed after al-Sayed cheered the news that ISIS forces had killed government soldiers in Sinai. Mohamed al-Naqash, Amin Shorta who killed a terrorism suspect at Imbaba Hospital referred to criminal court, al-Masry al-Youm, March 17, 2015, <https://www.almasryalyoum.com/news/details/682488> (accessed March 20, 2021).

[61] The National Council for Human Rights, The 14th Annual Report for 2018/2019.; and The 13th Annual Report for 2017/2018.; and The 12th Annual Report for 2016/2017, <https://www.nchr.eg/ar/annual> (accessed May 25, 2021).

[62] The 13th Annual Report for 2017/2018, ibid., p. 32.

[63] The 14th Annual Report for 2018/2019, ibid., p. 58.

[64] This report focuses only on shootouts involving alleged armed militants.

[65] Those include 297 allegedly killed in 31 incidents in North Sinai. But this report focuses only on cases in mainland Egypt, excluding North Sinai. Also, in very few incidents, the statements said that militants killed themselves while dealing with explosives during the alleged shootouts.

[66] Only two statements mentioned that two bystanders were injured.

[67] Sama Osama, Egyptian police kill 7 terrorists in raid in Cairo El-Amiriya ahead of Easter, al-Ahram, April 15, 2020, <https://english.ahram.org.eg/NewsContent/1/64/367325/Egypt/Politics-/Egyptian-police-kill--terrorists-in-raid-in-Cairo%E2%80%99.aspx> (Accessed July 29, 2021).

[68] See for example: The moment security forces stormed a terrorist hideout in al-Amiriya, video clip, YouTube channel of Sada al-Balad TV, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-Hcr0xE738> (accessed July 29, 2021).

[69] Ibid.

[70] Sinai, The Truth, We Record, March 4, 2021, https://wererecord.org/%d8%b3%d9%8a%d9%86%d8%a7%d8%a1-%d8%ad%d8%b5%d8%a7%d8%af-%d8%a7%d9%84%d8%ad%d9%82%d9%8a%d9%82%d8%a9/\(March%20,2021\)).

[71] Ibid.

[72] Ibid.

[73] Based on Human Rights Watch previous investigations, these are usually mass trials involving several hundred defendants prosecuted mainly based on circumstantial security allegations that often fail to establish individual criminal responsibility or provide material evidence. See for example, Egypt: Scant Evidence for Mass Convictions, Human Rights Watch news release, April 19, 2015, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/04/19/egypt-scant-evidence-mass-convictions>

[74] See for example: Security announces three [different] times the arrest and killings of suspects in the Prosecutor Generals assassination, al-Masry al-Youm, Ibid.

[75] See for example: Interior Ministrys statement about killing three men, Interior Ministry Official Facebook page, June 20, 2017, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/posts/1448534885190170> (accessed November 9, 2020).

[76] Human Rights Watch, Work on Him Until He Confesses, Ibid.; and Amnesty International, Egypt: Permanent State of Exception, Ibid.

[77] Ahmed Khair al-Din, Islam Atito, from Exam Room 260A to a Desert Road, al-Masry al-Youm, June 11, 2015, <https://www.almasryalyoum.com/news/details/752697> (accessed March 15, 2021).

[78] Human Rights Watch news release: Egypt: Dozens Detained Secretly, July 20, 2015, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/07/20/egypt-dozens-detained-secretly>.

[79] Ibid.

[80] Ibid.

[81] Ahmed Khair al-Din, Islam Atito, from Exam Room 260A to a Desert Road, Ibid.

[82] Ibid.

[83] Ibid.

[84] Egypt: Police Account of Deadly Raid in Question, Human Rights Watch news release, July 31, 2015, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/07/31/egypt-police-account-deadly-raid-question>.

[85] Ibid.

[86] Egypt: Top Prosecutors Killing a New Risk for Rule of Law, Human Rights Watch news release, June 30, 2015, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/06/30/egypt-top-prosecutors-killing-new-risk-rule-law>

[87] Al-Sisi Leads the Funeral of Prosecutor General Hisham Barakat, the Official YouTube Channel of Egypts Defense Ministry, June 30, 2015, Ibid.

[88] Interior Ministry statement about the killing of 9 men, Interior Ministry Official Facebook page, July 1, 2015, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/photos/a.922527107790953/922527114457619> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[89] Ibid.

[90] Ibid.

[91] Abdelrahman Abu el-Gheit, Reactions to the Killings of Egypts Brotherhood Leaders, Al Jazeera, July 1, 2015, <https://www.aljazeera.net/news/reportsandinterviews/2015/7/1/%D8%B1%D8%AF%D9%88%D8%AF-%D9%85%D8%AA%D8%A8%D8%A7%D9%8A%D9%86%D8%A9-%D9%84%D8%AA%D8%B5%D9%81%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D9%82%D9%8A%D8%A7%D8%AF%D8%A7%D8%AA-%D8%A5%D8%AE%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%86-%D9%85%D8%B5%D8%B1> (accessed June 11, 2015).

[92] Ibid.

[93] The Results of the Security Agencies Nationwide Efforts On June 30, Interior Ministry Official Facebook page, July 1, 2015, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/posts/922388411138156> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[94] Mohamed Barakat, Gehan Abdelaziz, and Mahmoud al-Garhy, Urgent: Nine Brotherhood leaders liquidated inside an October 6 City apartment, el-Watan Newspaper, July 1, 2015, <https://www.elwatannews.com/news/details/761948?#push> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[95] Egypt: Police Account of Deadly Raid in Question, Human Rights Watch news release, Ibid.

[96] Ibid.

[97] Ibid.

[98] Ibid.

[99] Ibid. The cause of death in many burial permissions Human Rights Watch reviewed were written in a laconic, unscientific way.

[100] See for example A lethal attack revisited, Mada Masr, July 13, 2015, <https://www.madamasr.com/en/2015/07/13/feature/politics/a-lethal-attack-revisited/> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[101] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Yasin, via Signal, October 31, 2019.

[102] Ibid.

[103] Ibid.

[104] Egypt: Morsy Death Sentence Follows Flawed Trials, Human Rights Watch news release, June 15, 2015, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/06/16/egypt-morsy-death-sentence-follows-flawed-trials>.

[105] Ibid.

[106] Ibid.

[107] A Burial Permission is an official document issued by the Health and Interior Ministries that relatives of the deceased need to obtain to be able to bury them.

[108] Interior Ministry statement about the Assiut shootout, Official Interior Ministry Facebook Page, December 6, 2016, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/photos/a.181676241876047/1254074861302841> (accessed November 3, 2020).

[109] Better known as Military Criminal Case 64 of 2017. Months after this incident, authorities referred this case to military trial, charging over 300 defendants with armed violence, including the attempted assassination of Assistant Prosecutor General Zakria Abdel Aziz.

[110] Interior Ministry statement about the Assiut shootout, Ibid.

[111] Ibid.

[112] Ibid.

[113] Ahmed Yehia and Mohamed al-Desiti, The Full Details of Liquidating 3 Suspects, Albawabh News, December 7, 2016 <https://www.albawabhnews.com/2258682> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[114] The Forcibly Disappeared Face Arbitrary Executions in Secret Detention Because of the Authorities Denial of the Forced Disappearance Phenomenon, The Egyptian Commission for Rights and Freedoms, press release, March 16, 2017, <https://www.ec-rf.net/?p=1865> (October 27, 2020).

[115] Ibid.

[116] Ibid.

[117] Ibid.

[118] The Egyptian Front for Human Rights and Belady Center for Human Rights, Abuse is the Default Situation, July 2, 2018, <https://egyptianfront.org/ar/2018/07/alentehak64case/> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[119] Nadia Abu el-Einin, The National Human Right Council Receives Complaints of the Families of the Defendants in the Case of Assistant Prosecutor General, Masr al-Arabia website, February 22, 2017, <https://masralarabia.net/%D8%A7%D8%AE%D8%A8%D8%A7%D8%B1-%D9%85%D8%B5%D8%B1/1370071-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%85%D8%AC%D9%84%D8%B3-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%82%D9%88%D9%85%D9%8A-%D9%8A%D8%AA%D9%84%D9%82%D9%8A-%D8%B4%D9%83%D8%A7%D9%88%D9%8A-%D8%A3%D9%87%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%8A-%D9%82%D8%B6%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%86%D8%A7%D8%A6%D8%A8-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B9%D8%A7%D9%85-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%85%D8%B3%D8%A7%D8%B9%D8%AF> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[120] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Tayseer, a relative of Gamal, via Whatsapp, October 31, 2019.

[121] Ibid.

[122] Ibid. He said that it was an initial court sentence but was not able to immediately provide court documents.

[123] Father of Abdelrahman Gamal recounts his sons story of enforced disappearance, Mekameleen TV Official Facebook Page, video clip, <https://www.facebook.com/watch/?v=1429975747020731> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[124] Ibid.

[125] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Tayseer, Ibid.

[126] Ibid. Tayseer could not immediately provide copies of the telegrams or faxes sent.

[127] Ibid.

[128] Ibid.

[129] Al Jazeera Egypt Facebook page, video clip, December 7, 2016, <https://www.facebook.com/watch/?v=336559833393721> (accessed October 27, 2020).

[130] MENA: 8 terrorists killed in an exchange of fire with the police in Safaga-Sohag highway, Youm7, May 8, 2017, <https://www.youm7.com/story/2017/5/8/%D8%A3-%D8%B4-%D8%A3-%D9%85%D9%82%D8%AA%D9%84-8-%D8%A5%D8%B1%D9%87%D8%A7%D8%A8%D9%8A%D9%8A%D9%86-%D9%81%D9%89-%D8%AA%D8%A8%D8%A7%D8%AF%D9%84-%D9%84%D8%A5%D8%B7%D9%84%D8%A7%D9%82-%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%86%D8%A7%D8%B1/3224541> (accessed October 21, 2020).

[131] Ibid.

[132] Interior Ministry statement about the eight killed, Interior Ministry Official Facebook page, May 8, 2017, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/posts/1411168052260187/> (accessed November 6, 2020).

[133] The pro-government website Albawabh news said that the killings were in an area between Safaga and Sohag. The C.V of the Brotherhood Terrorists Leading the Sohag Camp, May 8, 2017, <https://www.albawabhnews.com/2517710> (accessed October 23, 2020).

[134] Interior Ministry statement about the eight killed, Ibid.

[135] Mohamed al-Dessity and Ahmed Yehia, Photos of the 9 Terrorists Killed in Sohag, Albawabh News, May 9, 2017, <https://www.albawabhnews.com/2518661> (accessed November 6, 2020).

[136] Ibid.

[137] Interior Ministry statement about the eight killed, Ibid.

[138] Ibid.

[139] Ibid.

[140] Ibid.

[141] The Other Narrative of Liquidating 8 Dissidents by the Egyptian Government Before Crossing the Borders, Noon Post, May 25, 2017 <https://www.noonpost.com/content/18141> (accessed October 23, 2017); and They Were Fleeing to Sudan, The Truth of Accusing the Egyptian Police of Liquidating 8 Brotherhood Members After Detaining Them, Arabic Post, May 11, 2017, <https://arabicpost.net/archive/2017/05/11/%D9%83%D8%A7%D9%86%D9%88%D8%A7-%D9%8A%D9%87%D8%B1%D8%A8%D9%88%D9%86-%D8%A5%D9%84%D9%89-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B3%D9%86%D8%AF%D8%A7%D9%86-%D9%85%D8%A7-%D8%AD%D9%82%D9%8A%D9%82%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D8%AA%D9%87%D8%A7/> (accessed October 23, 2017).

[142] A Press Statement About The Liquidation of Eight Innocents by the Interior Ministry of the Coup, Ikhwan Online website, May 9, 2017, <https://www.ikhwanonline.com/article/229849/-%D8%AA%D8%B5%D8%B1%D9%8A%D8%AD-%D8%B5%D8%AD%D9%81%D9%8A-%D9%84%D8%AC%D9%85%D8%A7%D8%B9%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A5%D8%AE%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%86-%D8%AD%D9%88%D9%84-%D8%AA%D8%B5%D9%81%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D8%AF%D8%A7%D8%AE%D9%84%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A7%D9%86%D9%82%D9%84%D8%A7%D8%A8-8-%D8%A3%D8%A8%D8%B1%D9%8A%D8%A7%D8%A1> (accessed October 24, 2020).

[143] The Father of Abdelrahman al-Wakeel, One of the Victims Killed by the Interior Ministry, May 14, 2017, Al Jazeera Egypt Facebook Page, video clip, <https://www.facebook.com/206388199744219/videos/423252254724478/> (accessed October 23, 2020).

[144] Ibid.

[145] The Other Narrative of Liquidating 8 Dissidents, Noon Post, Ibid.

[146] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Nassers relative, Naeem, via Whatsapp, October 31, 2020.

[147] Ibid.

[148] Ibid.

[149] All young Egyptian men are required to serve in the army with some exceptions. Before traveling outside the country, men usually have to obtain an army permission that they are not wanted for military service.

[150] Abdul Fattah Faraj, Despite Tighter Security, Migrant Smuggling Thrives between Sudan, Egypt, Asharq al-Awsat, August 13, 2019, <https://english.aawsat.com/home/article/1855111/exclusive-%e2%80%93-despite-tighter-security-migrant-smuggling-thrives-between-sudan> (accessed October 21, 2019).

[151] A city on the Red City coast, in eastern Egypt.

[152] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Naeem, Ibid.

[153] Ibid.

[154] See under Ibrahim al-Ghazali.

[155] Ibid.

[156] Human Rights Watch and We Record joint remote interview with Yasser, al-Ghazalis relative, via Signal, on October 24, 2019, and another Human Rights Watch remote interview with Yasser, on November 3, 2020.

[157] Ibid.

[158] Ibid.

[159] Ibid.

[160] Human Rights Watch partially reviewed the case file and met with another defendant in this case who was arbitrarily arrested. The case follows the usual pattern of abusive charges based mainly on unsubstantiated accounts of National Security Agency officers.

[161] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with al-Ghazalis relative, Ibid.

[162] Ibid.

[163] Ibid.

[164] Ibid.

[165] Ibid.

[166] We Record shared with Human Rights Watch three photographs.

[167] The missing tissue and the discolored, irregular edges of this wound may indicate scavenger activity (rodents).

[168] Additional photographs that a Human Rights Watch research staff reviewed during a meeting in We Records office in Istanbul on October 24, 2019.

[169] Who are Egypt's militant groups? BBC News, November 24, 2017 <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-34751349> (accessed October 19, 2020).

[170] Mohamed el Sherif, ALi Abdelatti, Ahmed Aboulenein and Amina Ismail, Roadside explosion in Cairo kills Egyptian policeman, Reuters, June 18, 2017 <https://de.reuters.com/article/us-egypt-security-idUSKBN19901L> (accessed October 21, 2020).

[171] Interior Ministrys statement about killing three men, Interior Ministry Official Facebook page, June 20, 2017, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/posts/1448534885190170> (accessed November 9, 2020).

[172] Human Rights Watch conducted remote interviews with Khalils two relatives: Nihal on September 11, 2019, via WhatsApp, and with Nihal and Soha, via Skype on July 17, 2017.

[173] Ibid.

[174] North Cairo Military Criminal Case 52 of 2015. For more information about the use of military trials to prosecute thousands of political dissidents under President Abdel Fattah al-Sisis government, see: Egypt: 7,400 Civilians Tried In Military Courts, Human Rights Watch news release, April 13, 2016, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2016/04/13/egypt-7400-civilians-tried-military-courts>.

[175] October 6 City is frequently considered part of greater Cairo but administratively it is part of Giza.

[176] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with Khalils two relatives, Ibid.

[177] Ibid.

[178] Ibid.

[179] See below for more on Abu Tabeechs story.

[180] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with Khalils two relatives, Ibid.

[181] Ibid.

[182] Ibid.

[183] Interior Ministrys statement about killing three men, Ibid.

[184] Ibid.

[185] Human Rights Watch reviewed the military court verdict in Case 52 of 2015 in which Khalil was sentenced to 10 years in absentia.

[186] State Security Case 420 of 2017 involved over 270 defendants who were charged with belonging to Hasm and Liwa al-Thawra and responsibility for several violent attacks that killed and injured several police officers.

[187] See below for details on Mutaweas and Rasheds stories.

[188] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with Khalils two relatives, Ibid.

[189] Ibid.

[190] Ibid.

[191] Ibid.

[192] See below under International Legal Obligations.

[193] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with Khalils two relatives, Ibid.

[194] Ibid.

[195] Interior Ministrys statement about killing three men, Ibid.

[196] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Mutaweas relative, Mohsen, via Whatsapp, July 20, 2017.

[197] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Mutaweas relative, Mohsen, Ibid. The Interior Ministry statement mentioned Cases 81 of 2015 and 6737 of 2016 in Damnhour. The relative did not immediately have more details on the timing of the court verdicts or their nature.

[198] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with Khalils two relatives, Ibid.

[199] Ibid.

[200] Ibid.

[201] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Abu Rasheds relative, Zainab, via Skype, July 20, 2017.

[202] Ibid.

[203] Ibid.

[204] Ibid.

[205] Ibid.

[206] Ibid.

[207] The project was allegedly marred with corruption and the apartments that were meant to be occupied by workers in the nearby salt-producing factories were never inhabited. See for example: Three Housing Projects Occupied by Ghosts in Alexandria. Where Does Government Money Go? Mohamed Amer, Masrawy website, November 5, 2017, https://www.masrawy.com/news/news_regions/details/2017/11/5/1185523/%D8%AB%D9%84%D8%A7%D8%AB%D8%A9-%D9%85%D8%B4%D8%B1%D9%88%D8%B9%D8%A7%D8%AA-%D8%A5%D8%B3%D9%83%D8%A7%D9%86-%D8%AA%D8%B3%D9%83%D9%86%D9%87%D8%A7-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A3%D8%B4%D8%A8%D8%A7%D8%AD-%D8%A8%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A5%D8%B3%D9%83%D9%86%D8%AF%D8%B1%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D8%A3%D9%85%D9%88%D8%A7%D9%84-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AF%D9%88%D9%84%D8%A9-%D8%A5%D9%84%D9%89-%D8%A3%D9%8A%D9%86-%D8%B5%D9%88%D8%B1- (accessed October 20, 2020).

[208] Ibid.

[209] Ibid.

[210] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Abu Tabeechs relative, Basma, via Skype, July 17, 2020.

[211] Ibid.

[212] Ibid.

[213] Ibid.

[214] Interior Ministry statement about a shootout in October 6 city, the Interior Ministry Official Facebook Page, June 23, 2017, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/photos/a.181676241876047/1451079298269062> (accessed October 20, 2020).

[215] Ibid.

[216] Ibid.

[217] Ibid.

[218] See above under Sabry Khalil.

[219] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Abu Tabeeh's relative, Basma, Ibid.

[220] Interior Ministry statement on Ismailia (Gilbana) shootout, the Interior Ministry official Facebook page, July 15, 2017, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/photos/a.181676241876047/1474488482594810> (accessed October 28, 2020).

[221] Ahmed Tolba and Patrick Markey, Gunmen kill five Egyptian police south of Cairo, Reuters, July 14, 2017, <https://www.reuters.com/article/us-egypt-security-idUSKBN19Z0TI> (accessed June 11, 2021).

[222] Ibid.

[223] Ibid.

[224] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with N., a source who knew the families of both men, via Signal, August 29, 2019, and November 4, 2020. We use they to refer to this source to anonymize their gender.

[225] Suhail al-Mahys grandfather, Abdel Fattah Ismail, was a prominent Muslim Brotherhood member who was executed in 1966, in President Nasr's era, in the same notorious military trial with Sayed Qutb, one of the most influential Islamic writers in the history of the Muslim Brotherhood.

[226] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with N., Ibid.

[227] Ibid.

[228] Ibid. This is also how the Interior Ministry described them, a student and a carpenter.

[229] The way from Damietta to Cairo runs through Port Said, then to Ismailia, and al-Sharqia.

[230] Human Rights Watch remote interview with N., Ibid.

[231] Ibid.

[232] N. said the lawyer sent the telegrams but that they did not have copies. Human Rights Watch was unable to speak with the lawyer.

[233] Human Rights Watch remote interview with N., Ibid.

[234] Ibid.

[235] Ibid.

[236] Ibid.

[237] What the interviewee saw was probably signs of advanced decomposition, which can look like burn wounds to families of the deceased.

[238] Ibid.

[239] Ibid.

[240] Bloating typically occurs 2-3 days after death. Delineation of the vessels, called marbling, also occurs in the same postmortem interval. This duration is based on the assumption that al-Mahy was left in an outside environment. Temperature affects decomposition and therefore a final conclusion about the date of death is not possible without knowing in what kind of environment the body was kept.

[241] Degloving of the skin on the hands and feet is a sign of advanced decomposition.

[242] Stephanie van den Berg, Edmund Blair, Lesley Wroughton and other unnamed Reuters staff, Special Report: Egypt kills hundreds of suspected militants in disputed gun battles, April 5, 2019, Reuters, <https://www.reuters.com/article/us-egypt-killings-specialreport/special-report-egypt-kills-hundreds-of-suspected-militants-in-disputed-gun-battles-idUSKCN1RH10E> (accessed October 29, 2020).

[243] Ibid.

[244] Ibid.

[245] Human Rights Watch remote interview with N., Ibid.

[246] Ibid.

[247] Ibid.

[248] Ibid.

[249] Mohamed Magdy, A list of Names of those sentenced to life in prison and severe prison in Upper Egypt ISIS case, November 8, 2018, al-Shorouk, <https://www.shorouknews.com/news/view.aspx?cdate=08112018&id=743b2caf-faff-42bd-87d1-20ce3bf27955> (accessed October 29, 2020).

[250] Ibid.

[251] Human Rights Watch interview with N., Ibid.

[252] Mulaika's arrest and disappearance was reported by several human rights organizations such as Belady for Rights and Freedoms. See Belady for Rights and Freedoms Facebook Page, June 8, 2020, <https://www.facebook.com/beladyeg/posts/1304044456468973> (accessed November 6, 2020).

[253] Belady for Rights and Freedoms Facebook Page, January 27, 2021, <https://www.facebook.com/beladyeg/photos/a.714217748784983/1494454920761258> (accessed May 18, 2021).

[254] The Brotherhood-affiliated Egypt Window website said Ismail and her son Muthanna were forcibly disappeared. It published a photo of a complaint the family sent the National Human Rights Council inquiring about Muthanna's whereabouts on May 10, 2018, https://egyptwindow.net/Provincial_News/53978/default.aspx (accessed October 29, 2020).

[255] Interior Ministry statement about the Sinnouris shoutout, The Interior Ministry Official Facebook Page, July 23, 2017, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/posts/1481876358522689> (accessed November 3, 2020).

[256] Ibid.

[257] Ibid.

[258] Hasm claims responsibility for Fayoum shooting, Egypt Today, July 21, 2017, <https://www.egypttoday.com/Article/1/12984/Hasm-claims-responsibility-for-Fayoum-shooting> (accessed June 11, 2021).

[259] Human Rights Watch in-person interview with Abdelbaqys relative, Tawfiq, outside Egypt, October 16, 2019.

[260] Ibid.

[261] Human Rights Watch has previously documented the systematic arrests, prosecutions and torture of children in Egypt in cases of political grounds following the 2013 military coup. See: Human Rights Watch, No One Cared He Was A Child: Egyptian Security Forces Abuse of Children in Detention, March 23, 2020, <https://www.hrw.org/report/2020/03/23/no-one-cared-he-was-child/egyptian-security-forces-abuse-children-detention>.

[262] Human Rights Watch interview with Abdelbaqys relative, Tawfiq, Ibid.

[263] Ibid.

[264] Ibid.

[265] Ibid.

[266] Ibid.

[267] Ibid.

[268] Tawfiq could not provide copies of these telegrams to Human Rights Watch.

[269] Ahmed Mahmoud and Samir Ibrahim, Albawabh News, A Fugitive Brotherhood Student Sentenced to 10 Years Arrested in al-Sharqia, July 15, 2017, <https://www.albawabhnews.com/2615684> (accessed November 3, 2020).

[270] Ibid.

[271] Ibid. Human Rights Watch researchers found hundreds of articles by one of the journalists covering security-related issues in al-Sharqia, many citing the governor and other officials, indicating he had good connections with security agencies.

[272] Human Rights Watch interview with Abdelbaqys relative, Tawfiq, Ibid.

[273] Interior Ministry statement about the Sinnouris shoutout, July 23, 2017, Ibid.

[274] Ibid.

[275] Human Rights Watch interview with Abdelbaqys relative, Tawfiq, Ibid.

[276] Officers name redacted.

[277] Ibid.

[278] Ibid.

[279] Ibid.

[280] Ibid.

[281] Ibid.

[282] The Interior Ministry: 40 Terrorists Killed Before They Carry Out Operations Targeting Christmas Celebrations, December 29, 2018, al-Ahram government newspaper, <http://gate.ahram.org.eg/News/2081556.aspx> (accessed October 29, 2020).

[283] As mentioned earlier, this report focuses on killings outside Sinai, in mainland Egypt.

[284] The Interior Ministry: 40 Terrorists Killed Before They Carry Out Operations, Ibid.

[285] Ibid.

[286] Ibid.

[287] "Egypt police 'kill 40 militants' in raids after tourist bus blast, December 29, 2018, BBC <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-46708695> (accessed October 29, 2020).

[288] Mohamed al-Sahy, The Abna al-Giza Ruins: The Story of the Housing Project Turned a Nightmare for its Owners in the Desert, February 10, 2019, Sada al-Balad news website, <https://www.elbalad.news/3695116> (accessed October 29, 2020).

[289] The Interior Ministry: 40 Terrorists Killed Before They Carry Out Operations, ibid; and Mahmoud Abdel Rady, The Interior Ministry raids the terrorists hideouts, 40 Takfiris killed in Giza and North Sinai, Youm 7, December 29, 2018, <https://www.youm7.com/story/2018/12/29/%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AF%D8%A7%D8%AE%D9%84%D9%8A%D8%A9-%D8%AA%D8%AF%D8%A7%D9%87%D9%85-%D8%A3%D9%88%D9%83%D8%A7%D8%B1-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%A5%D8%B1%D9%87%D8%A7%D8%A8-%D9%85%D9%82%D8%AA%D9%84-40-%D8%AA%D9%83%D9%81%D9%8A%D8%B1%D9%8A%D8%A7-%D8%A8%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AC%D9%8A%D8%B2%D8%A9-%D9%88%D8%B4%D9%85%D8%A7%D9%84-%D8%B3%D9%8A%D9%86%D8%A7%D8%A1/4084977>; and Fahmy Ghaly, The First Photos of the Killings of 40 Terrorists in Giza and North Sinai, Mobatada, December 29, 2020, <https://www.mobatada.com/details/799821> (all accessed November 5, 2020).

[290] In a gun battle many more bullet casings or damage to the walls behind the bodies could be expected. Since the photographs focus only on the bodies it is not possible to know if there were more casings or unspent bullets than those in the photographs.

[291] Human Rights Watch remote interviews with Ashraf, on January 6, 2019, and November 4 and 11, 2020, and with the lawyer, via Signal, on January 7, 2019.

[292] Ibid.

[293] Ajnad Masr claimed responsibility for several terrorist attacks in 2014 and 2015. Authorities arrested and prosecuted dozens of suspects and defendants in four separate cases for allegedly being part of this group.

[294] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Ashraf, Ibid.

[295] More information about the Scorpion Prison, Human Rights Watch, We Are in Tombs, Abuses in Egypts Scorpion Prison, September 28, 2016, <https://www.hrw.org/report/2016/09/28/we-are-tombs/abuses-egypts-scorpion-prison>.

[296] Ibid.

[297] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Ashraf, Ibid.

[298] Ibid.

[299] Art. 143 of Egypts Criminal Procedural Code (Law 150 of 1950) as amended in 2013.

[300] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Ashraf, Ibid.

[301] Facebook post by lawyer Abdelaziz Ahmed Abdelaziz, November 17, 2018, https://www.facebook.com/permalink.php?story_fbid=2229265000696120&id=100008379248724 (accessed November 2, 2020).

[302] Facebook post by lawyer Abdelaziz Ahmed Abdelaziz, December 21, 2018, https://www.facebook.com/permalink.php?story_fbid=2252856108337009&id=100008379248724 (accessed November 2, 2020).

[303] Human Rights Watch remote interview with Ashraf, Ibid.

[304] Ibid.

[305] Facebook post by lawyer Abdelaziz Ahmed Abdelaziz, January 3, 2019, https://www.facebook.com/permalink.php?story_fbid=2261329867489633&id=100008379248724 accessed November 2, 2020).

[306] Facebook post by the Association of Families of the Disappeared - , December 29, 2018, https://www.facebook.com/permalink.php?story_fbid=2030569427030306&id=910729275680999 (accessed November 2, 2020).

[307] Ibid.

[308] Interior Ministry Facebook statement, Interior Ministrys official Facebook page, September 18, 2019, <https://www.facebook.com/MoiEgy/posts/2494260140617634> (accessed November 5, 2020).

[309] Ibid.

[310] We Record introduced Hossam to Human Rights Watch.

[311] ibid.

[312] Ibid.

[313] Human Rights Watch in-person interview with Hossam, Ibid.

[314] The Official Gazette (al-Waqaea al-Masriya) Issue 139 bis, June 20, 2018.

[315] The case was marred with abuses and over 120 defendants said they were forcibly disappeared. See earlier case, Three Men Killed in Assuit.

[316] Egyptian Commission for Rights and Freedoms, March 9, 2020, <https://www.facebook.com/ecrf.net/photos/pcb.1551148255048902/1551147261715668> (accessed March 22, 2021).

[317] Ibid.

[318] Human Rights Watch in-person interview with Hossam, Ibid.

[319] Egyptian security agencies frequently use unmarked cars and minibuses in their arrest campaigns. This has been the practice for decades.

[320] Human Rights Watch in-person interview with Hossam, Ibid.

[321] Ibid. Copies of the telegrams were provided by We Record.

[322] Ibid.

[323] Ibid.

[324] Militant Group Lewaa Al-Thawra Publishes Footage of Adel Ragaei Assassination, Mada Masr, November 16, 2016, <https://www.madamasr.com/en/2016/11/16/news/u/militant-group-lewaa-al-thawra-publishes-footage-of-adel-ragaei-assassination/> (accessed November 5, 2020).

[325] Interior Ministry Facebook statement, Interior Ministrys official Facebook page, September 18, 2019, Ibid.

[326] Human Rights Watch in-person interview with Hossam, Ibid.

[327] Egypt ratified and accessed ICCPR in 1982, ACHPR in 1984, and CAT in 1986.

[328] Art. 6, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), adopted December 16, 1966, G.A. Res. 2200A (XXI), 21, U.N.

[329] General Comment 36 (CCPR/C/GC/36), The United Nations Human Rights Committee, September 3, 2019, adopted by the Committee at its 124th session, October - November 2018.

[330] Art. 6, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), Ibid.

[331] African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, <https://www.achpr.org/legalinstruments/detail?id=49>.

[332] United Nations Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, Economic and Social Council resolution 1989/65 of 24 May 1989, <https://www.ohchr.org/Documents/ProfessionalInterest/executions.pdf> (accessed June 10, 2021).

[333] General Comment 36 (CCPR/C/GC/36), Ibid.

[334] Ibid.

[335] See below under Egyptian Laws.

[336] United Nations Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Havana, 27 August to 7 September 1990, U.N. Doc. A/CONF.144/28/Rev.1 at 112 (1990), Principle 9.

[337] Ibid.

[338] Ibid.

[339] Ibid.

[340] Ibid.

[341] Ibid.

[342] Human Rights Watch, We Do Unreasonable Things Here Torture and National Security in al-Sisi's Egypt, Ibid, and Human Rights Watch, All According to Plan: The Raba Massacre and Mass Killings of Protesters in Egypt, Ibid.

[343] Yousri al-Badry and Ibrahim Quraa, Acquittal for All Interior Ministry Officers in Protesters Killings, Ibid.

[344] Ibid.

[345] Art. 5, paragraph (d), United Nations Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, Ibid.

[346] Art. 23, United Nations Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, Ibid.

[347] Art. 26, Ibid.

[348] The UN Office of High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), The Minnesota Protocol On The Investigation Of Potentially Unlawful Death. The Revised United Nations Manual on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, 2016, <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Executions/Pages/RevisionoftheUNManualPreventionExtraLegalArbitrary.aspx> (accessed February 15, 2021).

[349] Ibid., p. 6.

[350] Ibid., p.1.

[351] Ibid., pp.1 and 6.

[352] Ibid., p. 5.

[353] Ibid., p.6.

[354] Ibid., p.4.

[355] Ibid., p.5.

[356] Ibid., p.9.

[357] Ibid., pp. 7,8.

[358] Ibid., p. 17.

[359] Arresting 5 of Hasm terrorist members and killing 5 others, Interior Ministry Facebook page, video clip, July 31, 2018, <https://www.facebook.com/watch/?v=1862270253816629> (Accessed May 20, 2021).

[360] Ibid., pp. 14-16.

[361] See for example: Egypt: Police Beat Man to Death, Family Says, Human Rights Watch news release, October 6, 2020, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2020/10/06/egypt-police-beat-man-death-family-says>

[362] Ibid., p. 17.

[363] See for example: Egypt: Uncover Missing Politicians Whereabouts, Human Rights Watch news release, March 19, 2019, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2019/03/19/egypt-uncover-missing-politicians-whereabouts>.

[364] International Commission of Jurists, Egypt's Judiciary: a Tool of Repression. Lack of Effective Guarantees of Independence and Impartiality, Ibid.

[365] See Amnesty International, Egypt: Permanent State of Exception: Abuses by the Supreme State Security Prosecution, Ibid.

[366] Louisa Loveluck: In Egypt, even an autopsy is political, Global Post, May 20, 2013, <https://www.pri.org/stories/2013-05-20/egypt-even-autopsy-political> (accessed January 21, 2021).

[367] See International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted September 23, 2005, E/CN.4/2005/WG.22/WP.1/Rev.4 (2005), and also the Declaration on the Protection of all Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by General Assembly resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992, <https://www.ohchr.org/EN/ProfessionalInterest/Pages/EnforcedDisappearance.aspx>.

[368] Human Rights Watch, We Do Unreasonable Things Here Torture and National Security in al-Sisi's Egypt , Ibid.

[369] Ibid.

[370] Declaration on the Protection of all Persons from Enforced Disappearance, General Assembly resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992, <https://www.ohchr.org/en/professionalinterest/pages/enforceddisappearance.aspx>

[371] The 2003 Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Fair Trial and Legal Assistance in Africa, African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, <https://www.achpr.org/legalinstruments/detail?id=38> (accessed June 15, 2021).

[372] UN Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, General Comment on the Right to the Truth in Relation to Enforced Disappearance, July 22, 2010, http://www2.ohchr.org/english/issues/disappear/docs/GC-right_to_the_truth.pdf (last accessed May 29, 2016).

[373] UN Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, ibid.

[374] ICCPR, art. 10.

[375] Amended Constitution of the Arab Republic of Egypt for 2014, Official Gazette, vol. 3 bis A, January 18, 2014.

[376] Ibid.

[377] Ibid.

[378] See the legal section under We Do Unreasonable Things Here. Torture and National Security in al-Sisi's Egypt, Ibid.

[379] Ibid. Since 1981, the state of emergency was lifted for only a few interrupted months, between June 2012 and August 2013, and November 2013 and April 2017.

[380] Law 94 of 2015 for Confronting Terrorism, Official Gazette Issue 33 bis, August 15, 2015. It was amended most recently in March 2020.

[381] Egypt: Counterterrorism Law Erodes Basic Rights, Human Rights Watch news release, January 22, 2021, <https://www.hrw.org/news/2015/08/19/egypt-counterterrorism-law-erodes-basic-rights>.

[382] Law 94 of 2015 for Confronting Terrorism, Ibid.

[383] Egypt's Law 150 of 1950 Regarding Criminal Procedural Code, Published in the Official Gazette on October 15, 1951, and as amended most recently in September 2020.

[384] Instructions to the Public Prosecution, art. 558 https://www.academia.edu/38963540/%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%AA%D8%B9%D9%84%D9%8A%D9%85%D8%A7%D8%AA_%D8%A7%D9%84%D9%82%D8%B6%D8%A7%D8%A6%D9%8A%D8%A9_%D9%83

(accessed May 21, 2021).

[385] Instructions to the Public Prosecution, art. 561, Ibid.

[386] Instructions to the Public Prosecution, art. 568 bis, Ibid.

[387] Human Rights Watch, Work on Him Until He Confesses: Impunity for Torture in Egypt, Ibid; and, We Do Unreasonable Things Here Torture and National Security in al-Sisi's Egypt, Ibid.

[388] International Commission of Jurists, Egypt's Judiciary: A Tool of Repression. Lack of Effective Guarantees of Independence and Accountability, Ibid.

[389] Ibid.

[390] Amnesty International, Egypt: Permanent State of Exception, Ibid.

[391] Ibid.

[392] The Arabic Network for Human Rights Information, The Story of a Lawyer and a Defendant in State Security Prosecution, August 5, 2019, <https://www.anhri.info/?p=10257> (accessed May 25, 2021).

[393] Human Rights Watch, Work on Him Until He Confesses: Impunity for Torture in Egypt, Ibid.

[394] Instructions to the Public Prosecution, art. 458, Ibid.

[395] See Conflict of Interest: Relying on Police for Evidence, in Human Rights Watch, Work on Him Until He Confesses: Impunity for Torture in Egypt, Ibid.

[396] Amnesty International, Egypt: Permanent State of Exception, Ibid.

[397] Ramy Mohey el-Din: Head of Forensic Authority Reveals that [they have] Only 80 Forensic Doctors Nationwide, Youm7, October 5, 2020, <https://www.youm7.com/story/2020/10/5/%D8%B1%D8%A6%D9%8A%D8%B3-%D9%85%D8%B5%D9%84%D8%AD%D8%A9-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B7%D8%A8-%D8%A7%D9%84%D8%B4%D8%B1%D8%B9%D9%89-%D9%8A%D9%83%D8%B4%D9%81-%D8%B9%D9%86-%D9%88%D8%AC%D9%88%D8%AF-80-%D8%B7%D8%A8%D9%8A%D8%A8%D8%A7-%D8%B4%D8%B1%D8%B9%D9%8A%D8%A7/5006672> (accessed May 21, 2021).

[398] See Delays and Poor Quality of Forensic Medical Examination, in Human Rights Watch, Work on Him Until He Confesses: Impunity for Torture in Egypt, under Ibid.

[399] The Prosecutor General Reveals the Truths about Enforced Disappearance, al-Ahram government newspaper, November 22, 2020, <https://gate.ahram.org.eg/News/2532769.aspx> (accessed June 10, 2021).

[400] The National Security Agency was formerly called State Security Investigations (SSI) before the January 2011 uprising.

[401] See under Legal Standards and Accountability, Human Rights Watch, All According to Plan: The Raba Massacre and Mass Killings of Protesters in Egypt, Ibid.

[402] See for example Arresting the Terrorists Responsible for Assassinating Policemen in Helwan, the official YouTube page of Egypt's Interior Ministry, video clip, June 7, 2016, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rrFGSIi7DS4> (accessed July 22, 2021), and, Statement About the Killing of 2 from the Terrorist Cell Involved in Murdering Colonel Hesham Azab, the Official YouTube page of Egypt's Interior Ministry, video clip, September 13, 2015, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GCDdiumhre8> (accessed July 22, 2021).

[403] See under Legal Standards and Accountability, Human Rights Watch, All According to Plan: The Raba Massacre and Mass Killings of Protesters in Egypt, Ibid.

[404] Human Rights Watch, We Do Unreasonable Things Here Torture and National Security in al-Sisi's Egypt, Ibid.

[405] Egypt: Top Security Prosecutor Khaled Diaa el-Din Abuses Defendants' Rights, Democracy for the Arab World Now (DAWN), September 3, 2020, <https://dawnmena.org/judge-khaled-diaa-el-din-head-of-the-supreme-state-security-prosecution/> (Accessed July 22, 2021).

Partners Should Halt Weapons Transfer, Impose Sanctions

Human Rights Watch defends the rights of people in 90 countries worldwide, spotlighting abuses and bringing perpetrators to justice

Human Rights Watch is a 501(C)(3)nonprofit registered in the US under EIN: 13-2875808