This report summarizes Vera's final report on the Alternative Youth Employment Strategies project, which was intended to improve job prospects and career preparation for low-income youths 14-21 year old. The program models include experience of program implementation and logic and structure of the experimental design. Also, there are many useful details regarding the analyses conducted, relationships between employment outcomes and non-program variables, and obstacles to effective program implementation that cannot be presented in a summary. For more details, please see the full report (1101).
