Public Facing Advocacy Writing

With my best friend riding shotgun and my two dogs in the back seat of my Buick Encore, I made the road trip from Washington, D.C., to Chicago last month for the ordination and consecration of Paula E. Clark, the first female bishop, and first Black bishop, of the Episcopal Diocese of Chicag

Even though special master Ken Feinberg, who was in charge of the first federal Sept. 11 Victim Compensation Fund, distributed $6 billion to the estates of those killed on 9/11 an average of more than $2 million to the nearly 3,000 victims the House of Representatives passed its new Fair

OPINION: "Arizonans have long enjoyed an expansive right to make law via referendum, though doing so requires great attention to detail and a massive effort to collect signatures. This year, however, the Legislature is asking you to make it harder to have your say," writes Sybil Francis,pre

OPINION: "Kirsten Engel might not care about protecting our state, but I have spent years doing so and I always will. I support Juan Ciscomani because he can be trusted to back our law enforcement, secure the border and keep our communities safe, something Kirsten Engel knows nothing about,"

Editor's note: The following information comes from Arizona Secretary of State - 2022 Primary Election, the Pima County Elections Department, candidates' campaign websites, the Pima County Democratic Party, the Pima County Republican Party and correspondence from campaigns. This list will be

OPINION: "To dramatically change this long-standing, incredibly successful educational structure, in the aggregate, will inflict great harm to education in our wonderful district, state, and country," writes retired Tucson school teacher John Williams.

OPINION: "These kinds of issues as well as numerous others have caused my grandson to decide that he will not pursue a military education. While I was disappointed, I must confess that I would not want to be subjected to these kinds of problems promulgated by our current Commander-In-Chief," writes Tucsonan Robert Lenhard.

OPINION: "Four decades after the great floods, the reckoning is here," writes William Schmidt, a professor emeritus in the School of Journalism at the UA and a former deputy managing editor and correspondent at The New York Times.

OPINION: "No government is perfect, and ours is no different. There are inefficiencies, redundancies and occasional instances of incompetence. But the contemporary vogue for regarding our government with lacerating contempt and impugning its very motives, is both ahistorical and self-defeating," writes Star contributor Terry Bracy.

OPINION: "Political ads, whether on TV or social media, are constructed to excite what psychologists call the lizard brain: the part of our brain stem that is reactive without reflection," writes Monica Bauer, a retired political science professor in Tucson.

Public ignorance and blind party loyalty are a candidate's best friend.

When conservatives talk about so-called entitlements, they act as if it's charity.

With my best friend riding shotgun and my two dogs in the back seat of my Buick Encore, I made the road trip from Washington, D.C., to Chicago last month for the ordination and consecration of Paula E. Clark, the first female bishop, and first Black bishop, of the Episcopal Diocese of Chicago. She's also my mom.

Even though special master Ken Feinberg, who was in charge of the first federal Sept. 11 Victim Compensation Fund, distributed $6 billion to the estates of those killed on 9/11 an average of more than $2 million to the nearly 3,000 victims the House of Representatives passed its new Fairness for 9/11 Families Act to allow additional claims for the deaths inflicted by the terrorists and set aside $2.7 billion for them.

A small but vocal contingent of the New York City's political class characterizes those of us who are alarmed by increasing crime and want more proactive policing, more effective prosecution and further refinement of state laws to ensure that lawbreakers face swift, sure consequences as nothing but reactionaries. The city remains historically safe, they say, so the order of the day should be more criminal justice reform.

Independent voter seems to be trying to define what independent voters stand for. Sorry but you sound like a trump supporter trying to hide your conservatives values behind the independent flag. Face it, you're a conservative Republican trying to define what most independent voters stand for.

The easiest way to get a large following in politics is to point the blame for all ills at another group of people. This has been proven many times. In our society, the right has condemned welfare and other efforts to help others by claiming that this is America, where anyone can make it if Purple for Parents is a Far Right Organization linked to the Patriot Movement Arizona. They are a counter movement against Red for Ed.

In his letter, the author wonders how people can deny one's choice to have an abortion, while staunchly defending another's to not vaccinate when mandated to do so (presumably for the benefit of all), and implies therefore an obvious hypocrisy exists.
