Death row inmate Alva Campbell, once dubbed the poster child for the death penalty for a deadly carjacking outside the Franklin County Courthouse 20 years ago, is now too sick to be put to death, his attorneys and advocates say.

The convicted killer is slated for execution Nov. 15, but Campbell has so much fluid in his lungs that he can't lie flat on the execution table for a lethal injection, one of his attorneys, David Stebbins, said Tuesday.

He'll start gasping and choking, Stebbins said, explaining that to sleep in prison, he has to prop himself up on his side. It's not very good.
