National Faith Leader calls on President Obama to Live up to His Promise to Close Guantanamo Bay Prison

WASHINGTON When President Obama gives this year's State of The Union Address, he will be speaking only one day after the 14th anniversary of the opening of the Guantanamo Bay Detention Center. Guantanamo is an internationally recognized symbol of a time when our nation's leaders betrayed our values and tortured people, and a prison where most continue to be detained without charge or trial. President Obama promised to close the prison at Guantanamo almost seven years ago.

Today, Rev. Ron Stief, executive director of the National Religious Campaign Against Torture called upon President Obama to live up to his promise, saying:

"Torture and imprisonment without trial are immoral and contrary to American values. Last year, Congress and the President took action to permanently end torture by passing bi-partisan legislation that prevents the U.S. from ever again using torture to interrogate people. Unfortunately, when it comes to holding people in detention without trial at Guantanamo Bay, our political and military leaders have been absent without leave.

The President should use his final State of the Union to make clear to Congress, and those in the Administration who have been obstacles to transferring detainees, that this is the year that he will close Guantanamo. The President has a good legacy on ending torture. He must match that with a legacy of ending indefinite detention without trial at Guantanamo."
