Public Facing Advocacy Writing

ST. PAUL, Minn. and WASHINGTON The Center for Victims of Torture (CVT) today issued this statement as Abdul Latif Nasser is transferred out of the Guantanamo prison.

Mr. Nassers transfer is a much welcome step towards closing the Guantanamo prison, and hopefully will allow him to begin to heal and reclaim his life after 19 years of injustice. The Biden administration needs to follow his transfer with swift and decisive action. Guantanamo is the iconic example of United States post-9/11 disregard for human rights and the rule of law; closing it is necessary to ending the forever war, as the president has pledged to do," said Scott Roehm, CVT Washington director.

Mr. Nasser was cleared for transfer out of Guantanamo, through the Periodic Review Board process, in July 2016. That means that cabinet-level officials from all relevant departments and agencies of the governments national security apparatus determined that he did not pose a continuing significant threat to U.S. national security. The Secretary of Defense, however, makes the final decision on transfers, in consultation with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Attorney General, Secretary of Homeland Security, and Director of National Intelligence. Thirty days prior to a detainee transfer, the Secretary of Defense must explain to Congress through a certification process Congress has imposed what steps will be taken to substantially mitigate the risk that the transfer might pose, and why the transfer is in U.S. national security interests.

In February, more than 110 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) working at both the local and national levels, and on issues including immigrants rights, racial justice and combatting anti-Muslim discrimination wrote to President Biden urging that he act without delay to close the prison. Additional calls for closing Guantanamo have ranged from President Bush to President Obama, the military to medical professionals, international jurists to a wide range of human rights organizations and local activists, to the late Senator John McCain. Among the former government officials who support closure are five Secretaries of Defense, eight Secretaries of State, six National Security Advisors, five Chairmen of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and dozens of retired generals and admirals.

Thirty-nine men still remain at Guantanamo, many of them torture survivors. Some were disappeared at CIA "black sites" before being sent to Guantanamo (as documented in the executive summary of the Senate Intelligence Committees 2014 report on the CIAs so-called enhanced interrogation program). Some were tortured at Guantanamo (as documented in the Senate Armed Services Committees 2008 report on the treatment of detainees in U.S. custody). All of the men have been exposed to the physical and psychological trauma associated with prolonged indefinite detention. They are aging rapidly and increasingly exhibiting complex medical conditions that staff at Guantanamo are not equipped to manage.
