Solitary Watch

Criminal Justice Issues and Prisoners' Rights

https://solitarywatch.org/2012/11/06/the-2-million-swing-state-voters-who-wont-be-voting-today/

Campaign and Advocacy

close Search
close
close
by Jean Casella and James Ridgeway	November 6, 2012

This new infographic from the Prison Policy Initiative shows the impact of felon disenfranchisement laws. While most states forbid people to vote while they arein prison, and many extend that ban to people on parole, only a handful make it next to impossible to regain your right to vote if youve ever been convicted of a felony. Even after youve served your time, its likely youll never vote again. Among these are two key swing states, Florida and Virginia, where some 2 million people are permanently disenfranchised.

According to PPIs data, a full 9 percent of Floridas voting-age population is disenfranchised because they have at one time been incarcerated. In Virginia, the figure is 6 percent. Given that a disproportionate number of disenfranchised ex-felons are people of color, and that Obama polls far ahead of Mitt Romney in the black and Latino communities, its not hard to deduce which candidatethe missing votes would favor. The results of this election may therefore hinge on the denial of a basic right to men and women who have long since paid their debt to society, but remain permanently excluded from the democratic process. (For more on this subject, see our recentarticle on Mother Jones.)

James Ridgeway (1936-2021) was the founder and co-director of Solitary Watch. An investigative journalist for over 60 years, he served as Washington Correspondent for the Village Voice and Mother Jones, reporting domestically on subjects ranging from electoral politics to corporate malfeasance to the rise of the racist far-right, and abroad from Central America, Northern Ireland, Eastern Europe, Haiti, and the former Yugoslavia. Earlier, he wrote for The New Republic and Ramparts, and his work appeared in dozens of other publications. He was the co-director of two films and author of 20 books, including a forthcoming posthumous edition of his groundbreaking 1991 work on the far right, Blood in the Face. Jean Casella is the director of Solitary Watch. She has also published work in The Guardian, The Nation, and Mother Jones, and is co-editor of the book Hell Is a Very Small Place: Voices from Solitary Confinement. She has received a Soros Justice Media Fellowship and an Alicia Patterson Fellowship. She tweets @solitarywatch.

Accurate information and authentic storytelling can serve as powerful antidotes to ignorance and injustice. We have helped generate public awareness, mainstream media attention, and informed policymaking on what was once an invisible domestic human rights crisis.

Only with your support can we continue this groundbreaking work, shining light into the darkest corners of the U.S. criminal punishment system.

by Juan Moreno Haines

October 25, 2022

by Solitary Watch Guest Author

October 13, 2022

by Vaidya Gullapalli

September 29, 2022

Solitary Watch encourages comments and welcomes a range of ideas, opinions, debates, and respectful disagreement. We do not allow name-calling, bullying, cursing, or personal attacks of any kind. Any embedded links should be to information relevant to the conversation. Comments that violate these guidelines will be removed, and repeat offenders will be blocked. Thank you for your cooperation.

The politicians are pretty criminal They control the vote

Most of us learn in school that a felony results in loss of right to vote. The obvious answer would be dont commit a felony. Dont do the crime if you cant do the time.

P.O. Box 11374 Washington, DC 20008

info@solitarywatch.org

Solitary Watch

Copyright 2022, Solitary Watch

Read about rights and permissions.

Solitary Watch News