CVT's report Reclaiming Hope, Dignity and Respect: Syrian and Iraqi Torture Survivors in Jordan, the product of two years of inperson interviews and study, is based on the stories of 64 men, women and children who either faced torture in their home countries or had close family members tortured and are working to rebuild their lives.

The interviews with torture survivors from Iraq and Syria were conducted in Jordan between January 2014 and October 2015. Our ongoing interactions with clients through mental health, physical therapy and social work services in Jordan also inform the findings.

The report also recommends steps for local and international actors to bolster support for the humanitarian situation in Jordanincluding ensuring that survivors in need have access to specialized trauma rehabilitation services, increased resettlement and taking steps to better integrate survivors into transitional justice process.
